

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

The temporary constitution, adopted by the revolutionary assembly of New Hampshire in 1776, was superseded in 1784 by a new constitution. This instrument gave the State a government which was still largely parliamentary. It provided for a chief executive, but gave him no veto on legislation, and surrounded him with a council chosen by and from the legislative branch. At the time of the adoption of the constitution, the people of the American states had come to a full realization of the impotence of the confederacy which had been formed under the Articles of Confederation, and of the necessity for a more efficient organic law for the union. This epoch has been well described as the "critical period in American history." The experience of New Hampshire at this time was not essentially different from that of the other American states. The performance of some of their most important federal duties could not be enforced upon the states, and domestic conditions were deplorable. The burdens imposed by the war were oppressive. A depreciated, fluctuating, and insufficient currency was a potent factor in the demoralization of business. Interstate commerce was at the mercy of conflicting legislation from as many legislatures as there were states, and foreign trade was subject to all the caprices of foreign avarice and intrigue. In this and the two succeeding volumes the legislative journals and executive records will be given entire, for the period beginning with the inauguration of government under the constitution of 1784 and ending with the close of the political year 1792-93, when a new constitution "took place." The Town Papers, edited by the late Isaac W. Hammond, being volumes XI, XII, and XIII of the full series of which the present volume is a continuation, and Mr. Hammond's volumes XVII and XVIII of Miscellaneous State Papers, contain much illustrative matter which is contemporaneous with these journals. The Hammond volumes are freely cited in this work. Their contents are an essential part of the record, and the influences that then moved legislation cannot, in most instances, be discerned without reference to the petitions, remonstrances, and other documents which their editor comprehensively described as "Town Papers" and "Miscellaneous Papers." The public and private acts which were the product of the legislation of this period, so far as can now be ascertained, were never published in full. The more important laws of a general and permanent nature were included in compilations, such as the Revised Laws of 1792. All the acts both of a public and private nature are supposed to be contained in Mss. volumes in the office of the Secretary of State. The State has furnished a valuable key to these in the "Index to the Laws of New Hampshire," edited by the late Dr. Edward Aiken, and published under the direction of the Secretary of State. In the preparation of the volume of journals and executive records now presented, an arrangement has been pursued which places them in convenient and natural order for reference. No elimination of any part of the record has been permitted. The original printed journals have not been found for all the sessions in the three years from June, 1784, to June, 1787. Where such printed journals were accessible they have been consulted and compared with the Mss. journals, (a complete series of which has been preserved for the period during which the constitution of 1786 was in force,) and all material differences indicated by the use of brackets or otherwise. The records of the executive council for this period were never before printed.

It should be noted in reference to the records of the president and council, that the numbering of the official Mss. volumes begins with the political year 1784-85. The nominations as well as confirmations and other official acts of that body for two years, are contained in a single volume, which is numbered and described as "1 P. & C."

After the close of the second political year, a separate record of nominations was kept in a volume which is designated "1 B. N." The record book which contains the other contemporaneous acts of the president and council is designated "2 P. & C."

Following the method of Mr. Hammond in previous volumes — a method with which those who consult the work are presumed to be familiar — an index of names and an index of places are separately given. These will indicate the page on which every name of person and place mentioned in the book may be found. In addition to these, indexes of subjects and of biographical notes have been provided. The star paging in the margins indicates the volume and page of the Mss. records from which the copy is made. The object of this work is to give the full official record through as long a period of time as possible within the space allowed, and thus to make it more generally available for the public use. This view may not entirely preclude, but it necessarily restricts, the appendage of elaborate historical or critical notes. Tables of officials and biographical notes and citations accompany the text, and are intended, like the indexes, as aids to those who, as officials or as students, may have occasion to use the work. In its preparation the official co-operation of His Excellency Governor David H. Goodell and the members of his council, and of His Excellency Governor Hiram A. Tuttle and the members of his council, has been cordially extended, and is acknowledged with pleasure. Mr. Otis G. Hammond has been an efficient assistant. Every needed service within their power has been afforded by the official custodians of contemporaneous state records and references. It has been necessary, however, to make the largest use of the archives preserved in the office of the Secretary of State. The Hon. Ezra S. Stearns, the present Secretary, has not only afforded in the work every official courtesy, but he has given it the benefit of his excellent judgment and his thorough knowledge of the general and documentary history of the state.

BILL OF RIGHTS, AND FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

Agreed upon by the Delegates of the people of the State of New Hampshire, in Convention, held at Concord, on the first Tuesday of June, 1783; submitted to, and approved of, by the people of said State; and established by their Delegates in Convention, October 31, 1783.

PART I.

THE BILL OF RIGHTS.

ARTICLE I.

All men are born equally free and independent; therefore, all government of right originates from the people, is founded in consent, and instituted for the general good.

II. All men have certain natural, essential, and inherent rights; among which are the enjoying and defending life and liberty — acquiring, possessing and protecting property — and in a word, of seeking and obtaining happiness.

III. When men enter into a state of society, they surrender up some of their natural rights to that society, in order to insure the protection of others; and, without such an equivalent, the surrender is void.

IV. Among the natural rights, some are in their very nature unalienable, because no equivalent can be given or received for them. Of this kind are the Rights of Conscience.

V. Every individual has a natural and unalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and reason; and no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained in his person, liberty or estate for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience, or for his religious profession, sentiments or persuasion; provided he doth not disturb the public peace, or disturb others in their religious worship.

VI. As morality and piety, rightly grounded on evangelical principles, will give the best and greatest security to government, and will lay in the hearts of men the strongest obligations to due subjection; and as the knowledge of these, is most likely to be propagated through a society by the institution of the public worship of the Deity, and of public instruction in morality and religion; therefore, to promote those important purposes, the people of this state have a right to empower, and do hereby fully empower the legislature to authorize from time to time, the several towns, parishes bodies-corporate, or religious societies within this state, to make adequate provision at their own expense, for the support and maintenance of public protestant teachers of piety, religion and morality:

Provided notwithstanding, That the several towns, parishes, bodies corporate, or religious societies, shall at all times have the exclusive right of electing their own public teachers, and of contracting with them for their support and maintenance. And no portion of any one particular religious sect or denomination, shall ever be compelled to pay towards the support of the teacher or teachers of another persuasion, sect or denomination.

And every denomination of christians demeaning themselves quietly, and as good subjects of the State, shall be equally under the protection of the law: and no subordination of any one sect or denomination to another, shall ever be established by law.

And nothing herein shall be understood to affect any former contracts made for the support of the ministry; but all such contracts shall remain, and be in the same state as if this constitution had not been made.

VII. The people of this State, have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign and independent State, and do, and forever hereafter shall exercise, and enjoy every power, jurisdiction and right pertaining thereto, which is not, or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled.

VIII. All power residing originally in, and being derived from the people, all the magistrates and officers of government, are their substitutes and agents, and at all times accountable to them.

IX. No office or place whatsoever in government, shall be hereditary — the abilities and integrity requisite in all, not being transmissible to posterity or relations.

X. Government being instituted for the common benefit, protection, and security of the whole community, and not for the private interest or emolument of any one man, family or class of men ; therefore, whenever the ends of government are perverted, and public liberty manifestly endangered, and all other means of redress are ineffectual, the people may, and of right ought, to reform the old, or establish a new government. The doctrine of non-resistance against arbitrary power, and oppression, is absurd ; slavish, and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind.

XI. All elections ought to be free, and every inhabitant of the State having the proper qualifications, has equal right to elect, and be elected into office.

XII. Every member of the community has a right to be protected by it in the enjoyment of his life, liberty and property ; he is therefore bound to contribute his share in the expense of such protection, and to yield his personal service when necessary, or an equivalent. But no part of a man's property shall be taken from him, or applied to public uses, without his own consent, or that of the representative body of the people. Nor are the inhabitants of this State controllable by any other laws than those to which they, or their representative body have given their consent.

XIII. No person who is conscientiously scrupulous about the lawfulness of bearing arms, shall be compelled thereto, provided he will pay an equivalent.

XIV. Every subject of this State is entitled to a certain remedy, by having recourse to the laws, for all injuries he may receive in his person, property or character, to obtain right and justice freely, without being obliged to purchase it ; completely, and without any denial ; promptly, and without delay, conformably to the laws.

XV. No subject shall be held to answer for any crime, or offence, until the same is fully and plainly, substantially and formally described to him ; or be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself. And every subject shall have a right to produce all proofs that may be favorable to himself : To meet the witnesses against him face to face, and to be fully heard in his defence by himself and counsel. And no subject shall be arrested, imprisoned, despoiled, or deprived of his property, immunities, or privileges, put out of the protection of the law, exiled or deprived of his life, liberty, or estate, but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

XVI. No subject shall be liable to be tried, after an acquittal, for the same crime or offence. — Nor shall the legislature make any law that shall subject any person to a capital punishment, excepting for the government of the army and navy, and the militia in actual service, without trial by jury.

XVII. In criminal prosecutions, the trial of facts in the vicinity where they happen, is so essential to the security of the life, liberty, and estate of the citizen, that no crime or offence ought to be tried in any other county than that in which it is committed; except in cases of general insurrection in any particular county, when it shall appear to the judges of the superior-court, that an impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the offence may be committed, and upon their report, the assembly shall think proper to direct the trial in the nearest county in which an impartial trial can be obtained.

XVIII. All penalties ought to be proportioned to the nature of the offence. No wise legislature will affix the same punishment to the crimes of theft, forgery, and the like, which they do to those of murder and treason; where the same undistinguishing severity is exerted against all offences, the people are led to forget the real distinction in the crimes themselves, and to commit the most flagrant with as little compunction as they do those of the lightest dye. For the same reason a multitude of sanguinary laws is both impolitic and unjust. The true design of all punishments being to reform, not to exterminate mankind.

XIX. Every subject hath a right to be secure from all unreasonable searches and seizures of his person, his houses, his papers, and all his possessions. All warrants, therefore, are contrary to this right, if the cause or foundation of them be not previously supported by oath, or affirmation; and if the order in the warrant to a civil officer, to make search in suspected places, or to arrest one or more suspected persons, or to seize their property, be not accompanied with a special designation of the persons or objects of search, arrest or seizure; and no warrant ought to be issued but in cases, and with the formalities prescribed by the laws.

XX. In all controversies concerning property, and in all suits between two or more persons, except in cases in which it has been heretofore otherwise used and practised, the parties have a right to a trial by jury; and this method of procedure shall be held sacred, unless in causes arising on the high seas, and such as relate to mariners wages, the legislature shall think it necessary hereafter to alter it.

XXI. In order to reap the fullest advantage of the inestimable privilege of the trial by jury, great care ought to be taken that none but qualified persons should be appointed to serve ; and such ought to be fully compensated for their travel, time and attendance.

XXII. The Liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a State ; it ought, therefore, to be inviolably preserved.

XXIII. Retrospective laws are highly injurious, oppressive and unjust. No such laws, therefore, should be made, either for the decision of civil causes, or the punishment of offences.

XXIV. A well regulated militia is the proper, natural, and sure defence of a State.

XXV. Standing armies are dangerous to liberty, and ought not to be raised or kept up without the consent of the legislature.

XXVI. In all cases, and at all times, the military ought to be under strict subordination to, and governed by the civil power.

XXVII. No soldier in time of peace, shall be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner ; and in time of war, such quarters ought not to be made but by the civil magistrate, in a manner ordained by the legislature.

XXVIII. No subsidy, charge, tax, impost or duty shall be established, fixed, laid or levied, under any pretext whatsoever, without the consent of the people, or their representatives in the legislature, or authority derived from that body.

XXIX. The power of suspending the laws, or the execution of them, ought never to be exercised but by the legislature, or by authority derived therefrom, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the legislature shall expressly provide for.

XXX. The freedom of deliberation, speech, and debate, in either house of the legislature, is so essential to the rights of the people, that it cannot be the foundation of any action, complaint, or prosecution, in any other court or place whatsoever.

XXXI. The legislature ought frequently to assemble for the redress of grievances, for correcting, strengthening and confirming the laws, and for making new ones, as the common good may require.

XXXII. The people have a right in an orderly and peaceable manner, to assemble and consult upon the common good, give instructions to their representatives ; and to request of the legislative body, by way of petition or remonstrance, redress of the wrongs done them, and of the grievances they suffer.

XXXIII. No magistrate or court of law shall demand excessive bail or sureties, impose excessive fines, or inflict cruel or unusual punishments.

XXXIV. No person can in any case be subjected to law martial, or to any pains, or penalties, by virtue of that law, except those employed in the army or navy, and except the militia in actual service, but by authority of the legislature.

XXXV. It is essential to the preservation of the rights of every individual, his life, liberty, property and character, that there be an impartial interpretation of the laws, and administration of justice. It is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as impartial as the lot of humanity will admit. It is therefore not only the best policy, but for the security of the rights of the people, that the judges of the supreme (or superior) judicial court should hold their offices so long as they behave well ; and that they should have honorable salaries, ascertained and established by standing laws.

XXXVI. Economy being a most essential virtue in all States, especially in a young one ; no pension shall be granted, but in consideration of actual services, and such pensions ought to be granted with great caution by the legislature, and never for more than one year at a time.

XXXVII. In the government of this State, the three essential powers thereof, to wit, the legislative, executive and judicial, ought to be kept as separate from, and independent of each other, as the nature of a free government will admit, or as is consistent with that chain of connexion that binds the whole fabric of the constitution in one indissoluble bond of union and amity.

XXXVIII. A frequent recurrence to the fundamental principles of the constitution, and a constant adherence to justice, moderation, temperance, industry, frugality, and all the social virtues, are indispensably necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty and good government ; the people ought, therefore, to have a particular regard to all those principles in the choice of their officers and representatives : And they have a right to require of their law-givers and magistrates, an exact and constant observance of them in the formation and execution of the laws necessary for the good administration of government.

PART II.

THE FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

The people inhabiting the territory formerly called the Province of New Hampshire, do hereby solemnly and mutually agree with each other, to form themselves into a free, sovereign, and independent Body-politic, or State, by the name of the State of New Hampshire.

THE GENERAL-COURT.

The supreme legislative power within this State shall be vested in the senate and house of representatives, each of which shall have a negative on the other.

The senate and house shall assemble every year on the first Wednesday of June, and at such other times as they may judge necessary ; and shall dissolve, and be dissolved, seven days next preceding the said first Wednesday of June ; and shall be stiled The General Court of New Hampshire.

The general court shall forever have full power and authority to erect and constitute judicatories and courts of record, or other courts, to be holden in the name of the State, for the hearing, trying and determining all manner of crimes, offences, pleas, processes, plaints, actions, causes, matters and things whatsoever, arising, or happening within this State, or between or concerning persons inhabiting or residing, or brought within the same, whether the same be criminal or civil, or whether the crimes be capital, or not capital, and whether the said pleas be real, personal, or mixed ; and for the awarding and issuing execution thereon. To which courts and judicatories are hereby given and granted full power and authority, from time to time to administer oaths or affirmations, for the better discovery of truth in any matter in controversy, or depending before them.

And farther, full power and authority are hereby given and granted to the said general-court, from time to time, to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes, ordinances, directions and instructions, either with penalties or without ; so as the same be not repugnant, or contrary to this constitution, as they may judge for the benefit and welfare of this State, and for the governing and ordering thereof, and of the subjects of the same, for the necessary support and defence of the government thereof ; and to name and settle annually, or provide by fixed laws, for the naming and settling all civil officers within this State ; such officers excepted, the election and appointment of whom, are hereafter in this form of government otherwise provided for ; and to set forth the several duties, powers and limits of the several civil and military officers of this State, and the forms of such oaths or affirmations, as shall be respectively administered unto them for the execution of their several offices and places, so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this constitution ; and also to impose fines, mulcts, imprisonments and other punishments ; and to impose and levy proportional and reasonable assessments, rates and taxes, upon all the inhabitants of, and residents within the said State, and upon all estates within the same ; to be issued and disposed of by warrant under the hand of the president of this State for the time being, with the advice and consent of the council, for the public service, in the necessary defence and support of the government of this State, and the protection and preservation of the subjects thereof, according to such acts as are, or shall be in force within the same.

And while the public charges of government, or any part thereof, shall be assessed on polls and estates in the manner that has heretofore been practiced ; in order that such assessments may be made with equality, there shall be a valuation of the estates within the State taken anew once in every five years at least, and as much oftener as the general-court shall order.

SENATE.

THERE shall be annually elected by the freeholders and other inhabitants of this State, qualified as in this constitution is provided, twelve persons to be senators for the year ensuing their election ; to be chosen in and by the inhabitants of the districts, into which this State may from time to time be divided by the general-court, for that purpose ; And the general-court in assigning the number to be elected by the respective districts, shall govern themselves by the proportion of public taxes paid by the said districts ; and timely make known to the inhabitants of the State, the limits of each district, and the number of senators to be elected therein ; provided the number of such districts shall never be more than ten, nor less than five.

And the several counties in this State, shall, until the general-court shall order otherwise, be districts for the election of senators, and shall elect the following number, viz ; Rockingham, five. — Strafford, two. — Hillsborough, two. — Cheshire, two. — Grafton, one.

The senate shall be the first branch of the legislature : And the senators shall be chosen in the following manner, viz. — Every male inhabitant of each town and parish with town privileges in the several counties in this State, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, paying for himself a poll tax, shall have a right at the annual or other meetings of the inhabitants of said towns and parishes, to be duly warned and holden annually forever in the month of March, to vote in the town or parish wherein he dwells, for the senators in the county or district whereof he is a member.

And every person qualified as the constitution provides, shall be considered an inhabitant for the purpose of electing and being elected into any office or place within this State, in that town, parish and plantation where he dwelleth and hath his home.

The selectmen of the several towns and parishes aforesaid, shall, during the choice of senators, preside at such meetings impartially, and shall receive the votes of all the inhabitants of such towns and parishes present and qualified to vote for senators, and shall sort and count the same in the meeting, and in presence of the town-clerk, who shall make a fair record in presence of the selectmen, and in open meeting, of the name of every person voted for, and the number of votes against his name ; and a fair copy of this record shall be attested by the selectmen and town-clerk, and shall be sealed up and directed to the secretary of the State, with a superscription expressing the purport thereof, and delivered by said clerk to the sheriff of the county in which such town or parish lies, thirty days at least, before the first Wednesday of June ; and the sheriff of each county, or his deputy, shall deliver all such certificates by him received, into the secretary's office, seventeen days at least, before the first Wednesday of June.

And the inhabitants of plantations and places unincorporated, qualified as this constitution provides, who are or shall be required to assess taxes upon themselves towards the support of government, or shall be taxed therefor, shall have the same privilege of voting for senators in the plantations and places wherein they reside, as the inhabitants of the respective towns and parishes aforesaid have. And the meetings of such plantations and places for that purpose, shall be holden annually in the month of March, at such places respectively therein, as the assessors thereof shall direct : Which assessors shall have like authority for notifying the electors, collecting and returning the votes, as the selectmen and town-clerks have in their several towns by this constitution.

And that there may be a due meeting of senators on the first Wednesday of June, annually, the president and three of the council for the time being, shall as soon as may, examine the returned copies of such records ; and fourteen days before the said first Wednesday of June, he shall issue his summons to such persons as appear to be chosen senators by a majority of votes, to attend and take their seats on that day: Provided nevertheless, That for the first year the said returned copies shall be examined by the president and five of the council of the former constitution of government; and the said president shall in like manner notify the persons elected, to attend and take their seats accordingly.

The senate shall be final judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of their own members, as pointed out in this constitution, and shall on the said first Wednesday of June annually, determine and declare, who are elected by each district to be senators by a majority of votes: and in case there shall not appear to be the full number returned elected by a majority of votes for any district, the deficiency shall be supplied in the following manner, viz. The members of the house of representatives and such senators as shall be declared elected, shall take the names of such persons as shall be found to have the highest number of votes in each district, and not elected, amounting to twice the number of senators wanting, if there be so many voted for; and out of these shall elect by joint ballot the number of senators wanted for such district: and in this manner all such vacancies shall be filled up in every district of the State, and in like manner all vacancies in the senate, arising by death, removal out of the State, or otherwise, shall be supplied as soon as may be after such vacancies happen.

Provided nevertheless, That no person shall be capable of being elected a senator, who is not of the protestant religion, and seized of a freehold estate in his own right, of the value of two hundred pounds, lying within this State, who is not of the age of thirty years, and who shall not have been an inhabitant of this State for seven years immediately preceding his election; and at the time thereof he shall be an inhabitant of the district for which he shall be chosen.

The senate shall have power to adjourn themselves, provided such adjournment do not exceed two days at a time.

The senate shall appoint their own officers, and determine their own rules of proceedings. And not less than seven members of the senate shall make a quorum for doing business; and when less than eight senators shall be present, the assent of five, at least, shall be necessary to render their acts and proceedings valid.

The senate shall be a court with full power and authority to hear and determine all impeachments made by the house of representatives, against any officer or officers of the State, for misconduct or mal-administration in their offices. But previous to the trial of any such impeachment, the members of the senate shall respectively be sworn, truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question according to evidence. Their judgment, however shall not extend farther than removal from office, disqualification to hold or enjoy any place of honor, trust or profit under this State; but the party so convicted, shall nevertheless be liable to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to the laws of the land.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

There shall be in the legislature of this State, a representation of the people annually elected and founded upon principles of equality: —and in order that such representation may be as equal as circumstances will admit, every town, parish, or place, entitled to town privileges, having one hundred and fifty rateable male polls, of twenty-one years of age, and upwards, may elect one representative; if four hundred and fifty rateable polls, may elect two representatives; and so proceeding in that proportion, making three hundred such rateable polls the mean increasing number for every additional representative.

Such towns, parishes or places as have less than one hundred and fifty rateable polls, shall be classed by the general-assembly, for the purpose of chusing a representative, and seasonably notified thereof. And in every class formed for the above-mentioned purpose, the first annual meeting shall be held in the town, parish, or place wherein most of the rateable polls reside; and afterwards in that which has the next highest number, and so on annually by rotation, through the several towns, parishes, or places, forming the district.

Whenever any town, parish, or place entitled to town privileges as aforesaid, shall not have one hundred and fifty rateable polls, and be so situated as to render the classing thereof with any other town, parish or place very inconvenient, the general-assembly may upon application of a majority of the voters in such town, parish, or place, issue a writ for their electing and sending a representative to the general-court.

The members of the house of representatives shall be chosen annually in the month of March, and shall be the second branch of the legislature.

All persons qualified to vote in the election of senators, shall be entitled to vote within the town, district, parish or place where they dwell, in the choice of representatives. Every member of the house of representatives shall be chosen by ballot; and for two years at least next preceding his election, shall have been an inhabitant of this State, shall have an estate within the town, parish or place which he may be chosen to represent, of the value of one hundred pounds, one half of which to be a free-hold, whereof he is seized in his own right ; shall be at the time of his election, an inhabitant of the town, parish, or place he may be chosen to represent ; shall be of the protestant religion, and shall cease to represent such town, parish, or place immediately on his ceasing to be qualified as aforesaid.

The travel of each representative to the general-assembly, and returning home, once in every session, and no more, shall be at the expense of the State, and the wages for his attendance, at the expense of the town, parish, or places he represents ; such members attending seasonably and not departing without licence. All intermediate vacancies in the house of representatives, may be filled up from time to time, in the same manner as annual elections are made.

The house of representatives shall be the grand inquest of the State, and all impeachments made by them, shall be heard and tried by the Senate.

All money bills shall originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

The house of representatives shall have power to adjourn themselves, but no longer than two days at a time.

A majority of the members of the house of representatives shall be a quorum for doing business : But when less than two thirds of the representatives elected shall be present, the assent of two thirds of those members shall be necessary to render their acts and proceedings valid.

No member of the house of representatives or senate, shall be arrested or held to bail on mean process, during his going to, returning from or attendance upon the court.

The house of representatives shall choose their own speaker, appoint their own officers, and settle the rules of proceedings in their own house. They shall have authority to punish by imprisonment, every person who shall be guilty of disrespect to the house in its presence, by any disorderly and contemptuous behavior, or by threatening, or ill treating any of its members ; or by obstructing its deliberations ; every person guilty of a breach of its privileges in making arrests for debt, or by assaulting any member during his attendance at any session ; in assaulting or disturbing any one of its officers in the execution of any order or procedure of the house, in assaulting any witness, or other person, ordered to attend by and during his attendance of the house, or in rescuing any person arrested by order of the house, knowing them to be such. The senate, president and council, shall have the same powers in like cases ; provided that no imprisonment by either, for any offence, exceed ten days.

The journals of the proceedings of both houses of the general-court shall be printed and published, immediately after every adjournment, or prorogation ; and upon motion made by any one member, the yeas and nays upon any question, shall be taken and entered in the journals.

The president with advice of council, shall have full power and authority in the recess of the general-court, to prorogue the same from time to time, not exceeding ninety days in any one recess of said court ; and during the session of said court, to adjourn or prorogue it to any time the two houses may desire, and to call it together sooner than the time to which it may be adjourned, or prorogued, if the welfare of the State should require the same.

In cases of disagreement between the two houses, with regard to the time of adjournment, or prorogation, the president with advice of council, shall have a right to adjourn or prorogue the general-court, not exceeding ninety days, at any one time, as he may determine the public good may require. And he shall dissolve the same seven days before the said first Wednesday of June. And in case of any infectious distemper prevailing in the place where the said court at any time is to convene, or any other cause whereby dangers may arise to the healths or lives of the members, from their attendance, the president may direct the session to be holden at some other the most convenient place within the State.

The president of this State for the time being, shall be commander in chief of the army and navy, and all the military forces of the State by sea and land ; and shall have full power by himself, or by any chief commander, or other officer or officers, from time to time, to train, instruct, exercise and govern the militia and navy ; and for the special defence and safety of this State, to assemble in martial array, and put in warlike posture, the inhabitants thereof, and to lead and conduct them, and with them to encounter, expulse, repel, resist and pursue by force of arms, as well by sea as by land, within and without the limits of this State, and also to kill, slay, destroy, if necessary, and conquer by all fitting ways, enterprize and means, all and every such person and persons as shall, at any time hereafter, in a hostile manner attempt or enterprize the destruction, invasion, detriment, or annoyance of this State ; and to use and exercise over the army and navy, and over the militia in actual service, the law-martial in time of war, invasion, and also in rebellion, declared by the legislature to exist, as occasion shall necessarily require : And surprize by all ways and means whatsoever, all and every such person or persons, with their ships, arms, ammunition, and other goods, as shall in a hostile manner invade, or attempt the invading, conquering, or annoying this State : And in fine, the president hereby is intrusted with all other powers incident to the office of captain-general and commander in chief, and admiral, to be exercised agreeably to the rules and regulations of the constitution, and the laws of the land : Provided that the president shall not at any time hereafter, by virtue of any power by this constitution granted, or hereafter to be granted to him by the legislature, transport any of the inhabitants of this State, or oblige them to march out of the limits of the same, without their free and voluntary consent, or the consent of the general-court, nor grant commissions for exercising the law-martial in any case, without the advice and consent of the council.

The power of pardoning offences, except such as persons may be convicted of before the senate by impeachment of the house, shall be in the president, by and with the advice of the council : but no charter of pardon granted by the president with advice of council, before conviction, shall avail the party pleading the same, notwithstanding any general or particular expressions contained therein, descriptive of the offence or offences intended to be pardoned.

All judicial officers, the attorney-general, solicitor-general, all sheriffs, coroners, registers of probate, and all officers of the navy and general and field-officers of the militia, shall be nominated and appointed by the president and council ; and every such nomination shall be made at least seven days prior to such appointment, and no appointment shall take place, unless three of the council agree thereto. The captains and subalterns in the respective regiments shall be nominated and recommended by the field-officers to the president, who is to issue their commissions immediately on receipt of such recommendation.

No officer duly commissioned to command in the militia, shall be removed from his office, but by the address of both houses to the president, or by fair trial in court-martial, pursuant to the laws of the State for the time being.

The commanding officers of the regiments shall appoint their adjutants and quarter-masters ; the brigadiers their brigade majors, the major-generals their aids ; the captains and subalterns their non-commissioned officers.

The division of the militia into brigades, regiments and companies, made in pursuance of the militia laws now in force, shall be considered as the proper division of the militia of this State, until the same shall be altered by some future law.

No monies shall be issued out of the treasury of this State, and disposed of (except such sums as may be appropriated for the redemption of bills of credit or treasurers' notes, or for the payment of interest arising thereon) but by warrant under the hand of the president for the time being, by and with the advice and consent of the council, for the necessary support and defence of this State, and for the necessary protection and preservation of the inhabitants thereof, agreeably to the acts and resolves of the general-court.

All public boards, the commissary-general, all superintending officers of public magazines and stores, belonging to this State, and all commanding officers of forts and garrisons within the same, shall once in every three months, officially, and without requisition, and at other times, when required by the president, deliver to him an account of all goods, stores, provisions, ammunition, cannon with their appendages, and small arms with their accoutrements, and of all other public property under their care respectively; distinguishing the quantity, and kind of each as particularly as may be; together with the condition of such forts and garrisons; and the commanding officer shall exhibit to the president, when required by him, true and exact plans of such forts, and of the land and sea, or harbour or harbours adjacent.

The president and council shall be compensated for their services from time to time by such grants as the general-court shall think reasonable.

Permanent and honorable salaries shall be established by law for the justices of the superior-court.

COUNCIL.

Annually on the first meeting of the general-court, two members of the senate and three from the house of representatives, shall be chosen by joint ballot of both houses as a council, for advising the president in the executive part of government, whom the president for the time being, shall have full power and authority to convene from time to time, at his discretion, and the president with the counsellors, or three of them at least, shall and may from time to time hold and keep a council, for ordering and directing the affairs of the State according to the laws of the land.

The qualifications for counsellors, shall be the same as those required for senators. The members of the council shall not intermeddle with the making or trying impeachments, but shall themselves be impeachable by the house, and triable by the senate for mal-conduct.

The resolutions and advice of the council shall be recorded in a register, and signed by the members present, and this record may be called for at any time, by either house of the legislature, and any member of the council may enter his opinion contrary to the resolution of the majority.

And whereas the elections appointed to be made by this constitution on the first Wednesday of June annually, by the two houses of the legislature, may not be completed on that day, the said elections may be adjourned from day to day until the same shall be completed. And the order of the elections shall be as follows: The vacancies in the senate, if any, shall be first filled up; the president shall then be elected, provided there should be no choice of him by the people, and afterwards the two houses shall proceed to the election of the council.

is a different provision made in this constitution: Provided nevertheless, The president, with consent of council, may remove them upon the address of both houses of the legislature.

Each branch of the legislature, as well as the president and council, shall have authority to require the opinions of the justices of the superior court upon important questions of law, and upon solemn occasions.

In order that the people may not suffer from the long continuance in place of any justice of the peace, who shall fail in discharging the important duties of his office with ability and fidelity, all commissions of justices of the peace shall become void, at the expiration of five years from their respective dates; and upon the expiration of any commission, the same may, if necessary be renewed, or another person appointed, as shall most conduce to the well-being of the State. The judges of probate of wills, and for granting letters of administration, shall hold their courts at such place or places, on such fixed days, as the convenience of the people may require. And the legislature shall, from time to time, hereafter appoint such times and places, until which appointments, the said courts shall be holden at the times and places which the respective judges shall direct.

All causes of marriage, divorce and alimony, and all appeals from the respective judges of probate, shall be heard and tried by the superior-court, until the legislature shall by law make other provision.

THE delegates of this State to the congress of the United States, shall some time between the first Wednesday of June, and the first Wednesday of September annually, be elected by the senate and house of representatives in their separate branches, to serve in congress for one year, to commence on the first Monday in November then next ensuing. They shall have commissions under the hand of the president, and the great seal of the state; but may be recalled at any time within the year, and others chosen and commissioned, in the same manner, in their stead ; and they shall have the same qualifications, in all respects, as by this constitution are required for the president.

No person shall be capable of being a delegate to congress for more than three years in any term of six years ; nor shall any person being a delegate, be capable of holding any office under the United States, for which he, or any other for his benefit, receives any salary, or emolument of any kind.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF LITERATURE, &C.

KNOWLEDGE and learning, generally diffused through a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government ; and spreading the opportunities and advantages of education through the various parts of the country, being highly conducive to promote this end ; it shall be the duty of the legislators and magistrates, in all future periods of this government to cherish the interest of literature and the sciences, and all seminaries and public schools, to encourage private and public institutions, rewards and immunities for the promotion of agriculture, arts, sciences, commerce, trades, manufactures and natural history of the country ; to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity, industry and economy, honesty and punctuality, sincerity, sobriety, and all social affections, and generous sentiments among the people.

B., do truly and sincerely acknowledge, profess, testify and declare, that the State of New-Hampshire is, and of right ought to be, a free, sovereign and independent State ; and do swear that I will bear faith, and true allegiance to the same, and that I will endeavor to defend it against all treacherous conspiracies and hostile attempts whatever : And I do further testify and declare, that no man or body of men, hath or can have, a right to absolve me from the obligation of this oath, declaration or affirmation ; and that I do make this acknowledgment, profession, testimony and declaration, honestly and truly, according to the common acceptation of the foregoing words, without any equivocation, mental evasion, or secret reservation whatever.*

So help me GOD.

I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely swear and affirm, that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as according to the best of my abilities, agreeably to the rules and regulations of this constitution, and the laws of the State of New-Hampshire. All writs issuing out of the clerk's office in any of the courts of law, shall be in the name of the State of New-Hampshire; shall be under the seal of the court whence they issue, and bear test of the chief, first, or senior justice of the court; but when such justice shall be interested, then the writ shall bear test of some other justice of the court, to which the same shall be returnable; and be signed by the clerk of such court.

All indictments, presentments and informations shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the State.

The estates of such persons as may destroy their own lives, shall not for that offence be forfeited, but descend or ascend in the same manner, as if such persons had died in a natural way. Nor shall any article which shall accidentally occasion the death of any person be henceforth deemed a deodand, or in any wise forfeited on account of such misfortune.

All the laws which have heretofore been adopted, used and approved, in the province, colony, or State of New-Hampshire, and usually practised on in the courts of law, shall remain and be in full force until altered and repealed by the legislature; such parts thereof only excepted, as are repugnant to the rights and liberties contained in this constitution: Provided that nothing herein contained, when compared with the twenty-third article in the bill of rights, shall be

No person shall ever be admitted to hold a seat in the legislature, or any office of trust or importance under this government, who, in the due course of law, has been convicted of bribery or corruption, in obtaining an election or appointment.

In all cases where sums of money are mentioned in this constitution, the value thereof shall be computed in silver, at six shillings and eight pence per ounce.

This form of government shall be enrolled on parchment, and deposited in the secretary's office, and be a part of the laws of the land, and printed copies thereof shall be prefixed to the books containing the laws of this State, in all future editions thereof.

To preserve an effectual adherence to the principles of the constitution, and to correct any violations thereof, as well as to make such alterations therein, as from experience may be found necessary, the general-court shall at the expiration of seven years from the time this constitution shall take effect, issue precepts, or direct them to be issued from the secretary's office, to the several towns and incorporated places, to elect delegates to meet in convention for the purposes aforesaid: The said delegates to be chosen in the same manner, and proportioned as the representatives to the general-assembly; provided that no alteration shall be made in this constitution before the same shall be laid before the towns and unincorporated places, and approved by two thirds of the qualified voters present, and voting upon the question.

<sup>1</sup> The regimental field officers are named in the following pages. It is not certainly known as to the incumbent of the office of adjutant-general at this time. See Potter's Military History of New Hampshire, Adjutant-General's Report, 1866, Vol. II. p. 372. By the terms of the Constitution of 1784, the incumbents of existing offices were continued until successors should be provided, or other disposition of the duties pertaining to them should be made under the new government. Hence it is difficult to trace the succession in several important offices during the revolutionary period, and the first few months of the constitutional period.

NOTE.—In an article in the “Granite Monthly,” New Hampshire Magazine, Vol. 10, p. 194, “New Hampshire in 1784,” many interesting facts are given concerning the inauguration and personnel of the state government of the first year under the new constitution. Many of the men connected with the administration of state affairs at this time had been prominent in the Province and Provisional Revolutionary Governments. As to such, many biographical notes will be found by reference to the preceding volumes of this series and to Chandler E. Potter’s Military History of New Hampshire, in the report of the Adjutant-General of New Hampshire, 1866, vol. 2, and the report of the same officer for 1868.—EDITOR.

A Proclamation.

Whereas there is reason to apprehend that there are, in different parts of the United States, Articles of Quarter Master's and Military stores, Cloathing, &c., the property of the United States, which have accidentally fallen into the hands of private Citizens, or remained in the possession of persons formerly but not at present in Office, of which the Heads of the several Staff Departments have no account;

The Committee of the States, taking this matter into consideration, have recommended to the Executives of the several States to call on the Citizens of their respective States to make returns forthwith of every Species of Public Property which may be in their possession.

I do therefore, with advice of Council, issue this Proclamation, and do hereby call on each and every Citizen of this State who may have any public Property in his possession forthwith to make Return thereof into the Secretary's Office, that so a Return may be made to Congress as speedily as may be agreeably to said recommendation.

Given under my hand this sixteenth day of Nov<sup>r</sup>, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred & eighty four, and of the Sovereignty & Independence of the United States of America the Ninth.

<sup>1</sup>. This Court was constituted with the same membership as the one existing at the termination of the provisional government, except that Judge Leverett Hubbard (a lawyer) was superseded by Judge John Dudley. Chief Justice Livermore was the only lawyer in the new Court. Judge Bartlett was a physician, Judge Whipple a merchant, and Judge Dudley a man of general business, which had included farming, milling, and merchandising. All, however, had been of great service to the State in the cause of independence. John Dudley's efforts had been less conspicuous, perhaps, than those of Livermore, Bartlett, and Whipple, who were all nearly as well known in the Continental Congress as in New Hampshire, but there is no doubt that he had devoted himself most assiduously to the common cause as a member of the Committee of Safety, and well deserved the approval of his countrymen. It is said that during the Revolutionary period he gave practically his whole time to his official duties. Bartlett and Whipple were both signers of the Declaration of Independence, and the several authors of Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence give a biographical sketch of each. The latest biography of Judge Livermore is the Historical Address of Hon. Charles R. Corning, Proceedings of the Grafton and Coös Bar Association, Vol. 1., p. 365; see also Vol. II., p. 95, and Collections of the N. H. Historical Society, Vol. v., p. 221. A biographical sketch of Judge Dudley is given in Farmer and Moore's Historical Collections, Vol. II., p. 42. An article on Josiah Bartlett in the "Granite Monthly," Vol. VII., p. 353, by Hon. Daniel Rollins, is the result of much research. New and interesting points on the life and character of Dr. Bartlett were also adduced in the proceedings at the dedication of the Amesbury monument in 1887. Many passages in the Memoir of Jeremiah Mason, the Life of Plumer, and the life of Jeremiah Smith give contemporary opinions and criticisms of the courts of this period, as viewed from the standpoint of the leading lawyers. The comments of Mr. Plumer (Life, p. 152) on the character of Judge Dudley are particularly interesting and suggestive.

<sup>1</sup> The list of civil and military appointments made under the Constitution of 1784 by President Wear and Council is probably the best index we have as to who were then regarded as representative men in the State. Gov. William Plumer prepared biographical sketches of many who are named in these appointments. His work is contained in five manuscript volumes, which his descendants have placed in the custody of the New Hampshire Historical Society at Concord. A printed index to these biographies may be found in the Proceedings of the Society, Vol. i., p. 435. As to those who were connected with military affairs, the student is referred to the biographical notes in Potter's Military History of New Hampshire. The index to the first part of Judge Potter's notes is in the Adjutant General's Report (N. H.), 1866, Vol. ii., p. xvii; to the second part, Adjutant General's Report (N. H.), 1868, p. xv. Many similar biographical notes are scattered along through the preceding volumes of this series of Province and State Papers. The Town Histories are available as a source of much biographical data. The best catalogue of local New Hampshire history is the Bibliography of New Hampshire, "Granite Monthly," Vol. iv., p. 288 (1881). Valuable titles could not be added to that list, as several important contributions to our local history have been since brought out. Some valuable biographical material is contained in the recently published histories or gazetteers of the several counties. They, however, devote more attention to modern biography than to that which pertains to the period covered by these journals. The Life of William Plumer, by his son, Boston, 1857; the Life of Jeremiah Smith, LL. D., by John H. Morrison, Boston, 1845; the Life of John Sullivan, by Thos. C. Amory, Boston, 1868, throw much light on the men and measures of the times in which the distinguished subjects of those works were active in public affairs.

<sup>1</sup> The "depreciation" which was so frequently under consideration at this period was the difference in nominal value of the paper emission of the government and its real value as measured by the specie standard. When the ratio was as seventy to one, the purchasing power of the paper currency was inconsiderable, and, as the ability to recompense the soldiers and others who had suffered from this cause came to the States with the return of peace and a measure of prosperity, it was but just that their claims should engross a liberal share of the attention of the General Court.

NOTE 1. — With this term of office as the first President of the State of New Hampshire, Meshech Weare closed a career of public service covering a period of forty-five years. His death occurred on the 14th day of the following January, 1786. According to Jeremy Belknap, the historian, Meshech Weare "though not a person of original or inventive genius, had a clear discernment, extensive knowledge, accurate judgment, a calm temper, modest deportment, an upright and benevolent heart, and a habit of prudence and diligence in discharging the various duties of public and private life."

NOTE 2. — The repetition of the paragraph on p. 250, ante, relative to John Dearborn and Moses Knight which occurred in the record of Dec. 17, 1784, in the MSS., was not followed in this work, as that repetition appeared to be a clerical error.

his Excellency's address reported an answer accordingly which being read it was voted to be presented and is as follows (viz)

May it please your Excellency,

The appointment of a Gentleman to the chief seat of this Government who has ever distinguished himself as a patriot and a statesman cannot fail to afford the highest satisfaction to the representatives of a free & virtuous people: Your Excellency may therefore rely on that aid and assistance which your important station may demand and our constitutional powers will enable us to afford.

We have considered with attention the several matters pointed out in your Excellency's address and being deeply sensible that the great ends of Government cannot be promoted without a general harmony and unanimity of sentiment among the citizens of a state & especially among those who are intrusted by the people with the conduct of their public affairs, Your Excellency may rest assured that no efforts on our part will be wanting to assist you in carrying your intentions into execution.

Such communications as we may receive from & such public papers as may be laid before us by your Excellency will be duly attended to.

The public affairs of the State being of so much more importance than those matters which relate only to the interest of individuals the former will undoubtedly have our earliest attention.

As the increase of our specie, inhancing the value of our lands establishing our national credit and subsisting a large number of our fellow citizens will greatly depend on a proper regulation of our commerce the encouragement of our own manufactures and discouraging the consumption of foreign articles, an early attention to those objects to prevent the increase of an evil already too sensibly felt in this State cannot fail to take place. The regulations of public roads and establishing post riders to keep up a proper communication between the different parts of this State will be attended to as soon as possible.

We are well assured that your Excellency's concurrence will not be wanting in any measures which may tend to promote the welfare of the State, and we beg leave to assure your Excellency that nothing shall be neglected on our part to promote the public interest and discharge the trust reposed in us.

John Sullivan, Speaker.

Sent up by Mr. Whipple.

The committee on the petition of Plainfield, Lebanon and other towns on Connecticut River, reported the following resolve: Whereas, it is represented that sundry towns on the east side of Connecticut River, within that territory (commonly called the New Hampshire Grants) furnished supplies of men, provisions and other articles to the Continental Army, and in the necessary defence of the frontiers, which for want of seasonable and regular returns, and for want of opportunity on their part to avail themselves of such other evidence (as the nature of their different circumstances admit no allowance for said articles or adjustments of their claims has yet taken place) and that many of those towns have been doomed to pay taxes far exceeding the sums which their inventories would warrant if they had been seasonably returned and lodged, which owing to a variety of causes, was not done: And whereas, extents are now out against a number of those towns, and others are about to issue against many of the remaining towns without any adjustment of their demands for allowance or determination upon their claims of exemption from any part of said tax:

And whereas, a fair and equitable adjustment of their respective demands and decision upon their various claims will tend to perpetuate that harmony and confidence among the good subjects of this State, which now so happily subsists between them, and is so essential to give energy to a republican government:

And as the various claims are too complicated to receive an equitable decision, or have a fair and candid examination, [determination] upon all of them during the session of this Court,

Therefore, Resolved, That the Hon. John Sullivan, John Calf and Moses Dow, Esq's, be and hereby are appointed Commissioners during the session of this Court, and in the *recess thereof, to hear and consider the claims of the several Towns aforesaid, and report to the General-Court, at this session, or at the next session thereof, on the first Wednesday of June next, and

 r. Mr. Amory says, Life of John Sullivan, p. 209, that he declined the office of Councilor, to which he was elected for the political year 1785-6. The record does not verify this statement, but shows that he served in that capacity during the entire year. Amory also states, in the same place, that Gen. Sullivan resigned the offices of Attorney-General and Major-General of the militia, March 4, 1786.

Series iii.; The New Hampshire Spy, Portsmouth, first issued Oct. 24, 1786, by George Jerry Osborne, the personal organ of Gen. Sullivan and during his administration the official paper. Its articles reflect his views and doubtless not a few were from his pen. The Gazette and Mercury of Portsmouth and the Freeman's Oracle of Exeter contain much political and controversial matter to which Gen. Sullivan and his rivals, directly or by their friends, were contributors.

2. Robert Means, son of Thomas Means, was born in Stewartstown, Ireland, August 28, 1742, and died in Amherst, N. H., January 24, 1823. He came to this country in company with Jacob McGaw, afterwards of Merrimack, in 1766. They were weavers and carried on the business in Amherst and Merrimack several years, but both at length abandoned that occupation, and engaged in mercantile pursuits. Both became wealthy and influential citizens. Means was active in Militia matters after the Revolution and commanded a cavalry regiment, hence he was afterwards known as Col. Means.

Col. Means married Mary McGregore, daughter of Rev. David McGregore of Londonderry, by whom he had nine children. Among them were Mary, b. Oct. 20, 1777, married Hon. Jeremiah Mason, Nov. 6, 1799.

Elizabeth, b. Sept. 8, 1779, married Rev. Jesse Appleton. They were parents of Jane Means Appleton, the wife of President Frank Pierce. Nancy, b. Oct. 28, 1783, m. (1) Hon. Caleb Ellis. (2) Hon. Amos Lawrence. Hon. William Gordon Means, now a resident of Andover, Mass., was a grandson of Col. Robert and Mary McGregore Means and the son of Col. 1. State Secretary Pearson was of Exeter. He continued in office until 1805, then he resumed his residence at Exeter. Bell's History of Exeter, 396.

2. Mr. Libbey was appointed Postmaster-General for this State, but it is doubtful if he ever exercised the duties of that office. There is correspondence in a previous volume of this series which indicates that the State office which was to be established was regarded by the Continental post-office department as incompatible with the office held under the latter authority. xviii. Ham. State Papers, 765, 771.

3. Col. Joseph Whipple was a native of Kittery, Me., and was in early life engaged in trade. He became largely interested in lands in the region which is now the southerly part of Coös County. He was one of the earliest settlers and the largest landowner in Dartmouth, now Jefferson. His name is prominent in the history and romance of the vicinity. B. G. Willey, White Mountain History, p. 70. In 1776, 1777, 1778, 1783, 1785, he was the representative of his legislative district which at first included all of the territory of the present Coös County and parts of Grafton and Carroll. Being identified with the leaders of public affairs in the southeastern part of the State, he was undoubtedly very influential in setting bounds to the political disaffection that prevailed in the Connecticut valley towns while the war was in progress. President Warren appointed him Colonel of the 25th Regt. of Militia in 1784. After the organization of the state government under the constitution, he was (March 4, 1786) appointed Impost officer at Portsmouth and served the State in that capacity till the federal government went into operation in 1789. He was then made collector of the port at Portsmouth by President Washington. This appointment was dated Aug. 3. Col. Whipple continued in office under it till July 6, 1798, when he was removed for political reasons by President Adams, and Thomas Martin appointed in his stead. Granite Monthly, Vol. 6, p. 111; Life of Jeremiah Smith, p. 140. In a letter relating to his removal from office written to Col. Whipple, Judge Smith said: "To your politeness as a gentleman, integrity, zeal and intelligence as an officer, I could most cheerfully bear witness. But these are not called in question." President Jefferson restored Col. Whipple to the office of collector Apr. 5, 1800. He was the incumbent thereafter until his death at an advanced age in 1816. He fostered the importance of diversified industries in the State and devoted a considerable amount by his will to be employed in the encouragement of manufacturing in New Hampshire.

4. The General Court of this State protested in January, 1787, against the removal of Mr. Gorham from his office. xviii. Ham. Misc. State Papers, 786.

5. Appointed Feb. 27, 1786. Benjamin West of Charlestown was appointed June 22, 1786, but did not accept, and Mr. Pickering continued in the office. 1. General Sullivan labored zealously to have the Militia so well organized and established that it would be a pillar of safety for the State. He was in a position in the legislature to exercise an important influence in shaping the first system of militia laws adopted after the revolution, and as Major General Commanding, and subsequently as President and Commander-in-chief, he gave the military department the full benefit of his experience, example and influence. He prepared a text-book in tactics; and his urgent appeals to the various classes that he desired to enlist actively in maintaining an efficient militia organization are characteristically able documents, replete with timely statements of fact and skillful and well directed argument. His mother, Christine Otis, was a daughter of Richard Otis of Dover, who was slain in the Indian massacre at that place June 27, 1689. This daughter was carried captive to Canada and after her return, married Capt Thos. Baker. Otis Baker was originally named Otis Archalaus Sherrington Baker, but upon arriving at full age he dropped all but the plain Otis Baker. The mature years of his life were spent at Dover where he died Nov. 6, 1800. See 5 N. E. Hist. Genealog. Society Register, pp. 177 et seq. Note especially pp. 195 and 204. John R. Ham, M. D.

12. Mr. Shepard was a Senator fifteen terms beginning with the first political year under the constitution of 1784. Manual of the State Senate by George C. Gilmore, passim.

13. Several errors relating to Col. Elisha Payne and his son Elisha Payne, Jr., have been passed along in historical publications for many years. Elisha Payne, Jr., has been erroneously mentioned as having been a State Senator. The junior Payne was not of constitutional age for election to the Senate till 1793. Therefore there can be no question that it was the senior Payne who was Senator in 1786 and 1787. His residence was at Lebanon and not at Haverhill as is sometimes stated in the official successions. The appellation "Col. Payne" which appears all through the record is not descriptive of the junior Payne, who was a young man, graduating from Dartmouth College in 1784. The senior Payne, however, was Lieut. Colonel of Col. Jambeth Chase's regiment in the Revolutionary period. Gov. Plumer referred to Payne as inactive in the constitutional convention of 1791 and 1792, on account of the infirmities of age. (Life of Plumer, 122.) This corrects the biographical note in 10 Bouton Prov. and State Papers, 37, wherever Elisha Payne, Jr., is named as the member from Lebanon. Biography by Wm. H. Cotton, Proceedings, Grafton and Coös Bar Association, Vol. 1, pp. 497, 632; Frederick Chase's History of Hanover, passim.

The Senators chosen by vote of the people in the election of 1786, were for the County of Rockingham, John McCleary, Joseph Gilman, and Joshua Wentworth; for the County of Strafford, John McDuffee and Otis Baker; for the County of Hillsborough, Matthew Thornton; for the County of Cheshire, John Bellows.

These Senators-elect all appeared and took the oath of office on the first day of the session, except Senator Baker, who came in June 9.

The ninth of June, in joint convention, the Senators wanting were elected as follows:

For the County of Rockingham, George Atkinson, John Bell.

For the County of Hillsborough, Ebenezer Webster.

For the County of Cheshire, Amos Shephard.

For the County of Grafton, Elisha Payne.

* His Excellency's message was in the following words : * 13 : 118
Gentlemen of the honorable Senate and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives.

The free and unsolicited suffrages of my fellow citizens having called me to the chief seat of government at a time when our trade is embarrassed, our finances deranged, and for want of a sufficiency of circulating cash, even the requisitions of Congress but in part complied with, duty and inclination lead me to recommend for your consideration those measures which appear to be most likely to promote the public good ; and to join you in adopting and enforcing such as you shall judge best calculated to preserve the publick faith, to encourage industry and frugality, and to relieve the people from their present difficulties.

To answer which purposes, if any measures more effectual than promoting agriculture, discouraging the consumption of foreign luxuries ; encouraging the manufactures of our own country, and giving [a] free course to the exportation of those articles which our soil or [and] industry may produce, had offered themselves to my view I should have proposed them for your deliberation, but as those will probably prove the most efficacious I beg leave to call your attention to objects so worthy of your notice, in full confidence that your wisdom will direct to such laws and regulations as will answer the expectations of your constituents, and advance the interest of our common country.

The laws now in force respecting navigation and commerce being thought by some to militate with publick commercial treaties, and supposed by others not calculated to answer the good purposes for which they were intended, may deserve your serious consideration.

The unfortunate events which prevented the sale of lumber the last year, occasions large quantities, manufactured before passing the late act for regulating the size thereof, to remain still in the hands of the industrious labourers and honest purchasers, and cannot now be exported or disposed of without violating said act, perhaps the injury which individuals must suffer by the operation of that law at this time may merit a suspension of it to some future period.

The opening roads and encouraging an intercourse between the several parts of this state are objects which I persuade myself will be deemed too important to pass unnoticed.

* 13: 119 * As our national character and even our political existence depend, in [a] great measure, upon the [a] punctual compliance with the requisitions of Congress, nothing can be more necessary than [the] adopting measures which will answer the demands and wishes of that honourable body, with as little delay as the nature of things will admit.

As a well regulated militia is the most safe and natural defence of this country, and from its importance merits every possible attention and encouragement; perhaps a review of the military system in this state may deserve your notice at this time.

A revision of the laws of this state, and particularly those which relate to duties imported are too important to escape your observation.

Gentlemen, the well known abilities, and patriotic spirit of the members in the respective branches of the legislature, afford to the publick the most pleasing prospect of the happy effects of their wise deliberations in this session, while their candor encourages me to hope for every necessary aid and constitutional support which the nature of my office may require.

Permit me to assure you, Gentlemen, that the happiness which I feel in meeting members of such knowledge and integrity in this assembly, will be augmented by every opportunity which I may have to prove my readiness to join you in any measures for advancing the interest of the state, and relieving the distresses of our fellow citizens.

Given at the Council Chamber in Concord, the 10th day of June, 1786.

JOHN SULLIVAN.

The committee then rose with leave to sit again, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

The committee to prepare and lay before this House an answer to his Excellency's message, reported the following :

May it please your Excellency,

When the Representatives of the free citizens of this state, see the supreme executive seat of government filled by a gentleman of known and approved abilities in the civil and military departments of life, they are animated with the most agreeable sensations ; and your being called into so high a station by the free suffrages of a virtuous people, encreaseth our joy in proportion to the wisdom, zeal and stability, which have rendered you conspicuous in many exalted offices in this and the United States.

The low state of our treasury and finances, the great scarcity of a circulating medium, and the embarrassments of commerce, we view as matters of great concernment, requiring our most serious attention.

The establishment of the publick credit, the promoting industry, economy and agriculture, increasing our own manufactures, enlarging our trade and navigation, upon principles of equality, encouraging exportation, and discouraging the importation of unnecessary and superfluous commodities, are matters of importance, demanding our earliest notice.

The revision of our laws, especially those for making the militia useful and reputable, and making such new laws as may be necessary for opening publick roads to distant parts of the state, should be duly attended to.

For confirming and enlarging the happiness of citizens, and rendering your Excellency's administration easy and honourable, and securing the constitutional rights of our fellow subjects, should be the greatest objects of our deliberation.

JOHN SPARHAWK, Speaker Pro. Tem.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry, no matter how small, should be recorded to ensure the integrity of the financial statements. This includes not only sales and purchases but also expenses and income. The document also highlights the need for regular reconciliation of bank statements and the company's cash records to identify any discrepancies early on.

In addition, the document provides guidelines on how to handle invoices and receipts. It states that all invoices should be clearly dated and itemized, and that receipts should be obtained for all purchases. This helps in tracking the flow of goods and services and ensures that all transactions are properly documented. The document also mentions the importance of keeping original documents safe and accessible for future reference.

Another key point is the need for transparency and communication. The document suggests that regular meetings should be held to discuss the financial performance and any issues that may arise. This allows for timely identification and resolution of problems, and ensures that all stakeholders are kept informed of the company's financial health.

Finally, the document concludes by emphasizing the role of the accounting department in providing accurate and timely financial information to management. It states that this information is essential for making informed decisions and for ensuring the long-term success of the company.

NOTE TWO.

THE CONVENTION OF 1787, HOLDEN AT PHILADELPHIA, WHICH PROMULGATED THE CONSTITUTION FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE STATES.

ACTION BY THE GENERAL COURT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE IN RESPONSE TO THE INVITATION TO JOIN IN THE CONVENTION.

Vote of January 16, 1787.

“Voted, That two proper persons be appointed to represent this state in the convention to be held in Philadelphia in May next, and that the Delegates be chosen by joint ballot of both Houses, and that a bill be brought in to ascertain the powers of said Delegates.”

It appears by a memorandum, attached to the record at the end of the printed journal of the House for this session, that the Senate non-concurred in the above vote.

Vote of January 17, 1787.

“Resolved, That any two of the Delegates of this state to the Congress of the United States, be, and hereby are appointed and authorized as deputies from this state to meet such deputies as may be appointed and authorized by other states in the union, to assemble in convention at Philadelphia on the second day of May next, and to join with them in devising and discussing all such alterations and further provisions as to render the federal Constitution adequate to the exigencies of the union, and in reporting such an act to the United States in Congress, as when agreed to by them and duly confirmed by the several states, will effectually provide for the same ; but in case of the death of any of said deputies, or their declining their appointments, the executive is hereby authorized to supply such vacancies, and the President is requested to transmit forthwith a copy of this resolve to the United states in Congress, and to the executive of each of the states in the union.

The foregoing resolve was returned from the Senate for the following amendment, “that the said Delegates shall proceed to join the convention aforesaid in case Congress shall signify to them that they approve of the said convention, as advantageous to the union, and not an infringement of the powers granted to Congress by the confederation.

Which amendment was read and concurred.”

PIERSE LONG, “
JOHN SPARHAWK, “
NICHOLAS GILMAN, Exeter.

1. In Amory's Life of Sullivan, p. 226, Langdon, Atkinson, Livermore, and Bartlett are named as the delegates to Congress and to the Federal Convention. The record does not confirm the statement.

A Vote of the Continental Congress, passed February 21, 1787.

“Resolved, that in the opinion of Congress, it is expedient, that on the second Monday of May next, a convention of delegates, who shall have been appointed by the several States, be held at Philadelphia, for the sole and express purpose of reviewing the articles of Confederation, and reporting to Congress and the several legislatures, such alterations and provisions therein, as shall when agreed to in Congress, and confirmed by the States, render the Federal constitution adequate to the exigencies of government, and the preservation of the Union.” — Journals of Congress, Vol. 12. p. 14.

In the House, June 14, 1787.

“Voted, That a conference be had with the honorable Senate, if they see fit, as soon as may be, in the Assembly Chamber, to take into consideration some method for forwarding Delegates to Congress and the Convention at Philadelphia, and any other matter that may come under their consideration.”

The Senate concurred the same day.

“In the House June 15, Voted, that Mr. N. Peabody, Mr. Odlin, Mr. Blanchard, Mr. Dix, and Mr. Holmes, with such of the honourable Senate as they shall join, be a committee to devise ways and means for forwarding Delegates of this State to Congress and the Convention at Philadelphia, and report thereon.”

The Senate concurred the same day.

Mr. Bellows, Mr. Bayley and Mr. Bell were joined.

In the House June 22, “Voted, That this House join with the honorable Senate if they see fit, to chuse four persons by joint ballot, either two of whom to represent this state in the Grand Convention now sitting at Philadelphia.”

This vote was brought up on the 23<sup>d</sup> in the Senate, read and concurred, and concurrence reconsidered.

In the House, June 26, “Voted, That this House join with the honourable Senate, if they see fit, to elect by joint ballot (as soon as may be) Delegates to represent this State in the Convention sitting at Philadelphia.”

COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED FROM THIS STATE TO MEET IN A CONVENTION PROPOSED TO BE HELD AT PHILADELPHIA IN MAY, 1787, TO TAKE UNDER CONSIDERATION THE REVISION OF THE ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION OF THE UNITED STATES, &C.

Chosen by Concurrence of the Senate in Votes originating in the House June 27, 1787.

JOHN LANGDON, Portsmouth.
 BENJAMIN WEST, Charlestown.
 JOHN PICKERING, Portsmouth.
 NICHOLAS GILMAN, Exeter.

Mr. Langdon and Mr. Gilman were the two New Hampshire delegates who actually attended the Federal Convention. The session of that body was well advanced before they appeared. Their first attendance in the convention was on the 23d of July. The representation of this state even at that late day was secured only by urgent appeals from abroad and extraordinary effort at home. The finances of the State were in a deplorable condition and it is impossible to realize at the present time what an undertaking it was to provide cash for any considerable public enterprise. It was currently reported in the newspapers of the day that the expenses of Mr. Gilman and himself were defrayed by Mr. Langdon from his private purse. (Historical Address of Hon. J. W. Patterson, 2 N. H. Hist. Soc. Proceedings, 28.) Mr. Langdon and Mr. Gilman signed the instrument as promulgated from the convention. The History of the Celebration of the Hundredth Anniversary of the Promulgation of the Constitution, before cited, gives biographies and copies of authentic portraits of the members of this body. Those devoted to Mr. Langdon and Mr. Gilman are on pages 142 and 146. At the time of that service Mr. Gilman was but twenty-five years of age. Though he died at a comparatively early age, he filled a large measure of public service in the most exalted stations to which the people of his own State could assign him.

Of the delegation named January 17, 1787, Pierse Long was a delegate to the New Hampshire Convention of 1788 and voted for ratification.

John Sparhawk died before the first Session of the New Hampshire Convention.

John Langdon, by a subsequent appointment, as before stated, attended the Federal Convention, was subsequently a member of the State Convention, and in both was an efficient supporter of the Constitution.

Nicholas Gilman was one of the delegates named January 17 and again June 27. His attitude towards the proposed Constitution was the same as that of Mr. Langdon, his colleague, but he was not a member of the State Convention of 1788.

John Pickering was elected a delegate to the Philadelphia Convention June 27, but did not attend. He was a member of the State Convention and voted for ratification.

Benjamin West, like Mr. Pickering a non-attending delegate, elected to the Federal Convention June 27, was a member of the State Convention and voted for ratification. Some interesting particulars in regard to his service in the State Convention are given by Mr. Mason in the extract from the latter's memoir which is quoted in a subsequent note.

NOTE THREE.

THE RATIFICATION OF THE CONSTITUTION ON THE PART OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

New Hampshire ratified the Constitution of the United States, June 21, 1788. As the consent of nine States was requisite, to make the instrument the organic law for the ratifying States, the action of this State made the federal government a fact. Four days afterwards Virginia gave consent. Her Legislature had not then been informed of the action of New Hampshire. Though the final vote of the one did not affect the action of the other, yet both undoubtedly had great influence on the result in New York. However desirable it was to have the consent of that great commonwealth, it was not now indispensable.

The Journal of the New Hampshire convention is given, with a roll of membership and biographical notices of members, in Bouton's Province and State Papers (N. H.) Vol. X. p. 1. The credentials of the members are in the files of the Secretary of State at Concord. The most satisfactory history of the convention, however, is that of Hon. Joseph B. Walker, published in 1888, Boston: Cupples & Hurd. This excellent work has much interesting collateral matter, including several new biographies of members, as well as notes and illustrations pertinent to the subject.

Other historical and biographical publications which deal especially with this convention and its membership, are the following:

- (1.) Centennial Address, by Hon. James W. Patterson, before cited.
- (2.) New Hampshire and the Federal Convention, by W. F. Whitcher, XI. Granite Monthly, 203.
- (3.) Biography of Samuel Livermore, by Hon. Charles R. Corning, Proceedings of the Grafton and Coös Bar Association (N. H.), Vol. 1, p. 365.
- (4.) Biography of Elisha Payne, by Hon. William H. Cotton, Id. pp. 497, 632.

(5.) Biography of William Simpson, XI. Granite Monthly, 367; Jesse Johnson, Id. 396, XII. Id. 510; Samuel Young, XII. Id. 36; Isaac Patterson, Id. 39, 97; Joseph Hutchins, Id. 59; John Weeks, Id. 340; Jonathan Freeman (Hanover in the Convention of 1788), XI. Id. 310.

(6.) Chapter X. of The Republic of Republics, Ed. 4, by C. P. Centz, Barrister (pseudonym). "New Hampshire Federalizes Herself. The Ninth to Ratify. Vote, 57 to 46. Date, June 21, 1788." These quoted words are the title of the chapter, which discusses the act of the State and its legal and political effect from the standpoint of the advocates of the extreme doctrine of state sovereignty. The volume is of 606 pages, a work of much research, published 1881. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.

(7.) The newspapers of the state at this period, which contain more or less of comment and discussion on the issues involved in the proposed changes in government were: "Freeman's Oracle and N. H. Advertiser," Exeter; "N. H. Gazette and General Advertiser," Exeter; "N. H. Mercury," Portsmouth; "N. H. Recorder and Weekly Advertiser," Keene; "N. H. Spy," Portsmouth.

(8.) The two political years from June, 1786, to June, 1788, during which John Sullivan was President of the State, constituted the period in which the principal events connected with the formation, discussion, and adoption of the constitution transpired. [Amory's Life of John Sullivan (1868), p. 226.] By a misprint, Hon. James W. Patterson, in his address on the occasion of the New Hampshire Historical Society's celebration of the centennial anniversary of the ratification of the constitution by New Hampshire, at Concord on the 21st of June, 1888, before cited — is made to say that John Langdon was President of the State in 1787. In the permanent publication of the society's proceedings, Mr. Patterson will cause the error to be corrected, and mention of it is made here at his request.

(9.) In Bancroft's History of the United States, Vol. 6, Part 2, which is devoted to the History of the Formation of the Constitution, in narrating the action of the New Hampshire convention of 1788, the author, on p. 409, mentions Woodbury Langdon in an account of the New Hampshire convention debate. Judge Woodbury Langdon was not a delegate. In that connection the name of Rev. Dr. Samuel Langdon should appear instead. The latter was a delegate representing Hampton Falls and Seabrook. He had been from 1774 to 1780 president of Harvard College. He had also served a pastorate of twenty-seven years with the North church at Portsmouth. Biographical sketch, 3 Plumer MSS. Biog. 653.

(10.) In the table of delegates, Bouton State Papers, Vol. 10, p. 7, a slight misassignment of Capt. Isaac Patterson as representative for Franconia and Lincoln, has occasioned error in the treatment of the local history which is related to the personnel of the convention. At this time the class of towns formerly constituted of Haverhill, Piermont, Warren, and Coventry (now Benton) had been divided. Haverhill and Coventry were a separate class for purposes of representation. Piermont and Warren constituted another class. Franconia and Lincoln were still another. Neither of these classes was represented in the first session of the convention. With the exception of the class which consisted of Conway, Eaton, Burton, (now Albany) and the Locations, which was partly in Strafford County and was represented by David Page, Grafton county was unanimous for the adoption of the constitution, so far as we may judge by the recorded vote at the second session. At this second session, however, Col. Joseph Hutchins appeared for Haverhill and Coventry with a negative vote, and Capt. Isaac Patterson for Piermont and Warren, with an affirmative. The Franconia and Lincoln class was not represented. This statement is based on an examination of the original credentials which are on file in the office of the Secretary of State. See correspondence on this subject, XII. Granite Monthly, 97; Sketch of Captain Patterson, Id. 39.

(11.) The well known historians of New Hampshire, Belknap and Barstow, devote space to the subject of the federal constitution. The work of the latter is particularly worthy of reference, as it contains the speech which is said to have been delivered in the state convention by Joshua Atherton, in which he opposes the constitution notably on the ground that it countenanced the institution of slavery.

(12.) Gov. Plumer, though not a member of the New Hampshire Convention, was active and prominent in public affairs at the time the constitution was under consideration. The members were his contemporaries, and he was familiar with the attitude taken by those who took a leading part in the discussion of the question. He comments freely upon these matters in his biographies of the men of that period. All of his sketches of members of the convention yield interesting points on this subject, and his treatment of the relations of Samuel Livermore, John Pickering, the Langdons, Joshua Atherton, John Sullivan, Benjamin West, Pierse Long, John Taylor Gilman, Josiah Bartlett, Joseph Badger and Benjamin Bellows to the contest for the ratification of the instrument by this State is very useful to the student of this branch of constitutional history.

(13.) Mr. McMaster, in his History of the People of the United States, Vol. 1, 484, 487, in discussing the relations of New Hampshire to the exciting events which preceded the practical end of the controversy over the establishment of the new government by the long delayed but finally favorable action of New Hampshire, Virginia, and New York, places the responsibility for the unexpected opposition to the constitution in our convention upon the country members. He says: "Such a host of country members came bidden to vote against the 'New Roof' that after struggling for a week the Federalists were glad to consent to an adjournment till the third Wednesday in June."

Nearly all the delegates might properly be regarded as country members, and if any opposition were to arise, it must have come from those who made up almost the entire membership. Portsmouth, with a population of 4,720 and three members, was strong for raising the "New Roof," while Londonderry, with 2,622 population and two members, was adverse. No other town had more than one delegate. Those which were represented by one delegate each, and which voted for the constitution, numbered forty and had an aggregate population by the census of 1790 of 43,370. The similar towns whose delegates voted against ratification, numbered thirty, and had a population of 38,712. A few representatives of such towns are recorded as not voting. There were five of these towns, and their population was 5,112. The small towns or the towns of sparse population, which were classed for purposes of representation, are assigned for, against, and not voting, as follows: Forty-seven towns in sixteen classes, with an aggregate population of 20,685, gave sixteen votes for the constitution; thirty-seven towns in fifteen classes, with an aggregate population of 18,126, gave fifteen votes against it; nine towns in four classes, with an aggregate population of 5,549, though represented, did not vote.

The following figures are also deduced from the census of 1790, and are given as bearing directly on the question of the relative population of districts voting affirmatively and negatively, and the responsibility of the so-called "country members" for the opposition to the adoption of the constitution. The total population represented by the affirmative vote was 68,776; by the negative vote, 59,640; not voting, 10,661. The average population of towns voting affirmatively was 764; negatively, 900; not voting, 761. The average constituency of delegates voting affirmatively was 1,166; negatively, 1,265; not voting, 1,185.

The vote for the constitution more largely preponderated in the county of Rockingham, and within the immediate circle of Portsmouth and Exeter influence, than in the central and western counties; but Grafton, as before shown, which was the most northern, the most remote, the most sparsely peopled, and probably as essentially a country constituency as any part of the State, was all but unanimous for adoption. If a township map of the state were to be colored, according to the vote in this convention, it would have very little significance as regards the territorial distribution or location of those for and against. It is not probable that many members came to the convention under specific instructions. The reasoning which moved individuals must be sought in the traditionary reports of the debates and the contemporary controversial literature. These are, however, unsatisfactory avenues in which to seek definite evidence as to what moved the minds and controlled the judgment of the scores of members who were not heard in debate or regarded as oracles. Why the response of the one was yea and the other nay was not regarded as a matter of any moment after the event. It was sufficient to know and remember what the Livermores and the Athertons thought of the constitution. Just back of this period was a confederation that had been sufficient in war but was now impotent in peace. The new constitution promised to regulate commerce and to realize the national unity which in some form had found a place in the anticipation of every intelligent American. But did not the new constitution exact too great a price for what it could confer? The people and their representatives in conventions to consider the proposed constitution naturally were divided in opinion. In New Hampshire, as elsewhere, reason obtained the mastery over doubt, and the experience of a century has so vindicated the prophetic judgment of the fathers of the constitution that we are at a loss to-day to understand why any one should not have seen in their prophecy all that we have realized in the full fruition.

NOTE FOUR.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF THREE REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL PERIOD,— BENJAMIN WEST, ELISHA PAYNE, AND JOHN LANGDON.

BENJAMIN WEST.

“ Mr. West was by far the first, best lawyer, and in all respects the most respectable man in that region of country. He was educated, I believe, at Princeton College, New Jersey, and commenced the practice of law at Charlestown before the close of the Revolutionary War. He had good natural powers of mind, a quick and clear perception, a delicate taste, highly refined, a sound judgment, and lively imagination. His style of speaking was simple, natural, smooth, and mild; always pure and neat, and sometimes elegant, with a good person, clear and pleasant voice, much earnestness and apparent sincerity,— he was, altogether, a most persuasive speaker. In arguing cases of complicated and doubtful evidence before a jury, I have seldom if ever heard his superior. In the discussions of questions of law and in argumentation of mere abstract propositions he was less powerful; indeed, for the discussion of questions of law he was deficient in law learning. This he was fully sensible of, and attributed it to his having quitted the study when he began the practice of the law. He said the elder Judge Livermore, who had been Attorney-General of the province before the Revolution, was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; that, having no law learning himself, he did not like to be pestered with it at his courts; that when he (Mr. West) attempted to read law books in a law argument the Chief Justice asked him why he read them; if he thought that he and his brethren did not know as much as those musty old worm-eaten books? Mr. West answered, “ These books contain the wisdom of the ancient sages of the law.” The reply was, “ Well, do you think we do not understand the principles of justice as well as the old wiggled lawyers of the dark ages did?” and thus his law books were laughed out of court. This was surely but poor encouragement for the dry study of law books.

“ Mr. West was remarkable for his modesty and diffidence; he never rose to speak on any important occasion without such excitement as caused a nervous tremor. I have heard him say that his feelings, arising from diffidence, were so distressingly oppressive, that he never rose on such occasions, when he would not willingly have given three times the amount of his fees to have been excused. He was a member of the Convention of New Hampshire for adopting the Constitution of the United States, where, from his known talents, much was expected from him. There was much discussion and the result, about which he was very anxious, was a long time held in doubtful suspense; yet, though strongly urged, such was his diffidence that he could not be induced to speak.

“ In social intercourse his manners were simple, but always courteous and urbane. He had a delicate and refined wit, and was fond of it in others; his manner of living was simple, exceedingly neat, and approaching to elegance; he indulged in a liberal hospitality, entirely free from all ostentation. In short, he was a gentleman in the true and best sense of the term. — Memoir of Jeremiah Mason, pages 28-30.

ELISHA PAYNE.

The conclusion of the struggle for independence, the settlement of the disputed boundary between New Hampshire and Vermont at the westerly bank of the Connecticut river, and the adoption of a definite form of government in this state raised many difficult questions affecting particularly the towns in the western part of the state, which had disputed the authority of the provisional government. It was to be expected that municipalities and individuals everywhere would urge demands for services, loans, and expenses in the public defence. The western New Hampshire towns and their inhabitants were not exceptions to the general movement for re-imbusement and relief. They were, however, embarrassed by the fact that their political attitude had been for years, and in an exceedingly critical period, hostile to the controlling party in the state, and that the same element which they had antagonized was still potential in public affairs. Under these circumstances, it was essential to their interests that their representatives should possess legislative aptitude and diplomatic skill for the successful management of interests that were sure to be antagonized for reasons which, if not valid, were at least plausible.

Among the able men who appeared from this section, none was better equipped for the task than Col. Elisha Payne of Lebanon. He was educated to the law in Connecticut, and came into Grafton county thoroughly imbued with Connecticut ideas as to the rights of towns as independent units of government and as to what should be the relations of towns to the state. The temporary New Hampshire constitution of 1776 was drawn in conformity to theories that were widely at variance with his conceptions of the methods and province of government. Notwithstanding the fact that he was named for important offices under the new state government, notably that of associate justice of the superior court of which Meschec Weare was chief in 1776, justice of the Grafton County Common Pleas later in the same year, and chief justice of the same court in 1779, he held aloof, and became a chief mover in the enterprise of establishing a state to be constituted of towns on both sides of the Connecticut river, or, failing in that, to join the disaffected towns on the east side of the river to the prospective state of Vermont, or a sufficient number of Vermont towns to New Hampshire to carry the balance of power to the Connecticut river. In 1778, he was a member of the Vermont legislature, representing a constituency on the east side of the river, and was a member of the executive council. In 1781 he was chief justice and his name appears on the official tables as the only incumbent of the office for that year. (Daniel Chipman's Vermont Reports, page vi. ; Slade's Vermont State Papers, 564 ; Records Governor and Council of Vermont, vol. 1, page 275.) He was also lieutenant governor and major general of the militia.

His party, however, could not control the resources with which to sustain an armed attempt to establish the autonomy of a state with boundaries making such extensive encroachments on what had been assigned to New Hampshire by royal authority.

President Weare, General Sullivan, Judge Livermore, and their coadjutors, were successful in turning the sentiment of Congress against the claims of Vermont to territory east of the river. Colonel Payne recognized the logic of events and with patriotic good sense accepted the situation. His biographer well says, "He was no vulgar conspirator, no fomenter of useless and groundless discontents, and accepted in good faith the result of the contest he had so ably waged." He was now in position to turn these changed relations to the mutual advantage of the parties lately in contention. He wisely improved this opportunity. In a brief time the animosity which attended this affair had subsided.

All through the period of important legislative development and constitutional change which intervened between 1783 and 1794, Colonel Payne held a conspicuous place in the public service. In 1784 and 1785 he was a representative, and in 1784 was appointed by the legislature a delegate to the Continental Congress. He formally accepted this appointment, but it does not appear that he actually attended at any session of that body. In 1786 and 1787 he was a state senator. In 1788, he was a delegate to the state convention which ratified the federal constitution. Judge Livermore was the acknowledged leader of the party which sought the acceptance of the proposed constitution. The fact that the delegation from the Grafton county towns was practically unanimous in support of Mr. Livermore (Correspondence, XII "Granite Monthly," 97) gives us the right to assume that he received timely and valuable assistance, not only from those with whom he exercised a large influence through his own personality, but also from those who had long regarded Colonel Payne as a political mentor.

He was one of the ten persons who were named for chief justice of the superior court in the executive council July 16, 1789, from whom John Pickering first and afterwards Josiah Bartlett was chosen.

He was a member of the most important committee in the convention which promulgated the state constitution of 1793, but at this time he had become less active and aggressive in dealing with questions of public policy than in his earlier political experience. Mr. Plumer, commenting on the personnel of the committee, says, "the infirmities of age made Payne inactive." He came into this state in middle age. During the succeeding twenty-five years of his life he was influential in public affairs. In the constructive period of our political and constitutional history he will be recognized as one who made an impress on his times by his knowledge of the principles of government, and his ability to mold the opinions of men and shape events by the peculiar force and individuality of his character.

"SOME ACCOUNT OF JOHN LANGDON."

BY JOHN LANGDON ELWYN.

John Langdon was born in the month of December, 1739: in a house, such as is provincially still called a garrison house, near the head of the small inlet of the sea, at the mouth of which established itself the first permanent colony, it is said, of the English on the Piscataqua in the spring: 1623: certainly the second, 1631. The stream of the early history of New-England has been so corrupted by the subsequently predominant Puritan faction, who troubled themselves about nothing that did not go to their own glory, in their phrase, the glory of God, that one half the world think this coast was unvisited till about the time it was honored with their presence; in all likelihood the English came to the Piscataqua for fifty years before: Cornish fishermen did not print their voyages then more than Yankee fishermen do now. The site of the house of: 1631: is rather less than three miles below where he was born, and is perfectly well known: indeed it is not to be mistaken, and the choice of it would have raised the reputation of a Phenician navigator. For an ocean settlement on an Indian shore, near the best harbor of the States, its situation is superb. It has got along, without a monument, more than two hundred years; this promontory; and, like enough, will two hundred more: "Akte epi proechouse, epi platei Helleponto, Hos ken telephanes ek pontophin andrasin cie; Tois hoi nun gegaasi, kai hoi metopishen esontai." A little stronger effort followed the first: 1631: and discovered the perseverance of Ambrose Gibbon: we believe a native of the county of Devon. His letters to his employers, in his hardships, show him to have been an honest, faithful Englishman. His daughter Rebecca married Henry Sherburne, one of his companions: and was we suppose the mother of Elizabeth Sherburne.

From the simple and affectionate custom of burying the dead upon their little farms, gravestones are common about the creek: but the earliest graved is that of Captain Tobias Langdon, who owned the garrison house at the head of the creek: and is buried hard by. This Tobias was born here on Sagamore's creek: 1666: and was the son of another Tobias Langdon, who came here, when precisely we do not know; but he was living very early where his son was born and married to Elizabeth Sherburne, daughter of Henry Sherburne, above named: to whom was granted this land round the head of the creek. This sequestered district has seen few changes of property; and three or four thousand acres on the Southern side of Sagamore's creek, is, every acre of it, still in the hands of various families who have inhabited it more than two hundred years. West of England names were common with the breed that helped to settle the fishing stations of the coast: such roots as Langdon, Landon, Sloper, Soper, Lear, Fowey, Champnowne, Bampfyld, Peveril, Polkinghorne, Penhallow, Trevethen, Treworgy, are chiefly of un-Saxon original. Langdon the Cornishman was one of the smaller settlers and died young: July 27th, 1664: leaving this only child. His widow married Tobias Lear and lived hard by: where their descendants stayed till nearly our day.

This little Piscataqua colony had neither a religious nor a political purpose, and nothing to do with its Puritan neighbours. Governour Winthrop attributes Gorges and Mason's failing to make money by their plantation, to God's rightful anger with the professed enemies of the Puritans of the Bay. Indeed their proceeding to settle a clergyman of the Church of England: 1640: the year of the impeachment of Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford, (a name which has domestic sound from its being given by the New-Hampshire Wentworths to the noble County of Strafford) in the thunder-storm of English fanaticism and rebellion, betokened no more of the Commonwealth than the Saints: their chapel was built some time before. It has occasioned much discussion, and some Calvinistic writers of the last century, in their zeal to purify New-England's maiden Calvinism from such a stain as these poor fishermen's proceedings, have tried to get over the fact by maintaining that his flock neither knew nor cared of what religion their pastor was to be. It seems that the Massachusetts Puritans, without a shadow of right, they have howled ever since about losing their own charter afterward, with their usual arrogant, intolerant and usurping temper, did think it worth while to instantly take advantage of something wrong about the man, to come and drive him out of the country: it seems that to the Church of England he notoriously belonged: had been preaching at the Isles of Shoals, the largest fishing station on the coast: also near Portland; where tradition says he was settled and had a church: it seems that Thomas Walford, one of the churchwardens, had been driven out of the Bay before: and Henry Shurburne; the other, subsequently registers his name, with his son-in-law Sloper's, Tobias Langdon being dead, as refusing to subscribe to the support of a noted Puritan, with the appropriate name of Moody: this looks like the memory of insult: and the whole transaction shows they meant to set up the altar of their fathers, and the violence of their neighbors interfered to throw it down. We do not wonder at it: had we come to such a place as Eastern Massachusetts, to exhilarate ourselves with the union of Church and State, we should not ourselves have let these Samaritans escape our vigilance, when it would knock our project on the head: and our good New-England disputants of the last century did not tell, for they were too ignorant to know, what the Puritans feared, that throughout England away from London and left to themselves, much more in the paradise of novelists, the West of England, in the afterward great Royalist Counties of Cornwall and Devon, a majority of the simple and lowly English, such as, unlike them, these people were, might look back on the charities, the sports and the holidays, and have too much natural proneness to the religion, so congenial to the proud but so condescending to the humble, the glorious religion of the Church of Rome. The Puritans' Democratic Principle, we suppose, did not then rise so much above the pitch of other mens' as some of their descendants are always telling us it did : at any rate they did not leave their great projects of permanent civil and religious freedom for that to take care of : a solicitude not peculiar to them.*

Tobias Langdon married Mary Hubbard of Salisbury in Massachusetts, and left two daughters and seven sons. He died : 1724-25 : in the beginning of 1725 : having arisen to be Selectman, Captain, and Deacon of the North Church. His youngest son John tilled the ground of his forefathers, and, near our door, he is buried with his wife, by the side of his father. His life has not given much stimulus to history : but he left the name of an honest, strong and good-natured yeoman. He was many years chairman of the board of Selectmen. We plead guilty without shame, to a liking to local histories and genealogies and reverence for a gravestone. Our creek must, from the town records and deeds and wills, for the little yeomanry and humble fisherman had them all, have been better peopled a century and a half ago than now. Already in this youthful land, dark and heavy forests shroud their cellars, apple-trees and gravestones. We have often wished that Ambrose Gibbon or Henry Sherburne, the born subjects of Elizabeth, or Captain Tobias Langdon and his seven stately sons, or Ambrose Sloper and his seventeen children, or even the African slaves, them they had then, they leave them in their wills, and unerring local tradition still points to negro graves, could for once stand up before us and tell us what they did do in the long, long time they were here. The Boston road near by, goes over some graves ; whose they are nobody knows nor cares : but the little heaps of earth are not yet worn down by the wheels of stage-coaches : and we have lately seen an ancient tomb, of an honored family in our colonial history, of the Cuttses and the Vaughans, lying open in the heart of a village of eight thousand people, with its lettered marble that its poor owners took pains to bring from across the Atlantic, more than a century ago, broken to pieces, and their thigh-bones, jaw-bones and skulls lying scattered on its floor. A few miles off, caring for the rights neither of living or dead, a railway goes, not over, under a family burying-place. The forefathers, of course, found it time to start : and Paddy shovelled the bones into his horse-cart with great joy. That he should make Francis Drakes, such is the inherited name of two hundred years, throw such somersets :

“ The piratical hero : how he would have stamped on
 The sands and the swamps and the rocks of Old Hampton ;
 That he round the world should be first to make sail,
 That the bones of his children might be sold to * * * * *
 Had Essex and Raleigh, and Spenser and Mountjoy
 Known how Ireland's revenge would at last now have found joy,
 Though their nerves to be sure would have run a slight shiver
 'That our English bones even here at Little River
 When Boston folks Railways so furiously ran on,
 And o'er our graves Yankees must needs lay their plan on,
 Be kicked out of their way by the wild men of the Shannon.”

* Jenness's "Isles of Shoals," p. 143.

Paddy has found and will find it harder to dig out the other Cromwellians that robbed fairer meadows from Catholics there than Heathens had to give them here :

“ Oh Cromwell ! your curse rests on Ireland we know :
 Sure enough, it's there yet ; but here 'tis not so :
 For all that we see you conquered in vain,
 If Paddy's to dig us all up in Long Lane.
 When we see him cut up our children's best meadow,
 What good is't to think how his blood ran in Tredagh ?
 How many your troopers shot, threw into brooks,
 That Saint's children might grow into Barons and Dukes ;
 If we must pay up here for Paddy's complaints,
 That three-fourths of Ireland you gave to your Saints :
 Shut him up by law in the Kingdom of Connaught,
 And knocked out his brains when he dared to come out.
 This your Great Act of Grace, you so nobly did call,
 For you'd talk'd pretty hard about killing them all !
 (Such a loss to the world would never have been yet,
 Were Paddy extinct we no Railways should get,
 Any more than cotton and sugar should we grow,
 Without the cowhide on the back of the negro.)
 Come out ! he's got here ; in a horse-cart now I go,
 Tossed in by this tattered breech from County Sligo.
 Those you kept there in Ireland got much better fare,
 After seizing the lands of Fitzgerald, Kildare,
 They with New-England wisdom, when Charles was took back,
 Swore they never belonged to our Puritan pack,
 And again on the turn, left poor James in the lurch,
 Stood out for the Dutchman, and Protestant church ;
 And when all was o'er and the King lost his own,
 Grew to great Orange nobles to hold up the throne.
 We came to Witch Creek, Ballyhack and Drake's Plain,
 But Paddy must follow ; we're at it again :
 We burn down his convents : he spoils our gravestones,
 And gluts his revenge upon Cromwellian bones.”

Doggerel may be history in Ireland or here : this is in both.

John Langdon born : 1707 : married Mary Hall of Exeter, whose mother we believe, was a Woodbury of Beverly. The legend has it that he took her very young : and his brother Joseph, the progenitor of most of our neighbours of various names, one of his wives, yet younger : the eldest being fourteen. This simple epitaph raises many strange thoughts : “ Here lyes y<sup>e</sup> body of Mrs. Mary Sloper, wife of Captain Henry Sloper, who dyed : 1718 : aged sixteen years.” Mrs. Langdon had a clever family of four daughters and two sons : of which John Langdon was the second. Her father, Josiah Hall of Exeter, her mother's genealogy we have not happened to stumble on, was the son of Kingsley Hall, one of its leading citizens, and Elizabeth Dudley, daughter of Samuel Dudley, the son of Thomas Dudley, second governour of Massachusetts Bay. We have had no trouble to ascertain so much of a New Hampshire pedigree, reaching through humble life to the reign of Elizabeth. Mr. Langdon was of the oldest New-England stock : and though born more than a century ago, of the sixth generation of English colonists.

Feuds disquieted the parental councils. Her boys' spending their energy upon their native swamps and gravelly knolls, which did not shock the English yeoman's instinct of the one, roused her country's spirit from its slumbers in the other. Their bringing up was taken from his hands: what she thought learning she tried to get for her boys; that they might fulfil the purpose for which she knew her countrymen born, to get from home as quick as possible and rise in the world. A right German thirst after knowledge had as much to do with their talk about education then as now: but self-neglecting never tainted their character: laborious efforts to get what will not turn to worldly advantage are doubtless wicked: but ambition nor self-love has no right to every other principle of action's name when it chooses to take it. Still the poor farmer's wife, on so barren a spot, straining to give her children all the chance she could, has something in it prophetic and noble. Tilling the ground, unfortunately for the real progress of, taken together, the clever country which encompasses the Piscataqua, was not the turn of our forefathers: we recollect the favour it found, when ready gains cursed New England in the twenty years war. But the English built ships of fifty guns here in the reign of William and Mary, and their prospect of beating their neighbours' sons by a sort of back-blow, was too brilliant for parents to dwell with much fondness on their own's staying to hoe Indian corn and cut salt grass here in Ballyhack, till they slept with their fathers, with one unmarked stone at their head and another at their foot, full of years, labours, simplicity and rum. There were no charms to the eternal and hereditary hoe: "von einer heldenhand zur andern erbt sich der unbesiegte stahl." The Piscataqua country was in full communication with the rest of the British empire and identified with the English navy. John was sent to the school of the celebrated Major Samuel Hale. He there learned most of what he ever learned, except from the world: some progress he unquestionably made, for his industry was tolerable and his memory truly uncommon. He never, during our knowledge, was seen to read: but like others, whose libraries have been limited, he sometimes startled by his astonishing memory of particular books: some of which probably made part of the scanty collection his mother could get hold of, and them he read when young. However some would dispute his ever having heard of the book, we have heard him spout Pope's Homer to children when past seventy. The passages, we think, required only the Dual number: he spouted them with great spirit. He had really some knowledge of Latin. Art, ambition and gayety marked his boyhood.

John Langdon, with his brother, turned from his paternal acres to a counting-house. He then went to sea, like many others of the time, as captain, supercargo and owner of vessels of his own building. We believe, he in seamen's phrase, crept in at the cabin window, and had no experience of seamanship except as a commander. This, however short a cut to mastering a profession, seems to do well in practice to this day, to judge from its frequency: for against the notion that the way to learn to command is to learn to obey, it is conceded, that though it take twenty years to make a good seaman, a much better captain of a ship than common may be made in six months. The navigation of New-England was very active, the English lion saw his whelps spring with his own instinct on their first prey : and it is unquestionable that the ratio of increase of people and business in the colonies for a few years before the American war was as great as it has ever been in the United States. During this period of his life, he was in London repeatedly, where he formed an acquaintance with a young gentleman from the County of Devon, then an under clerk in a Portsmouth house, who afterward grew into the late well-known wealthy Mr. Robert Pulsford, of London. We ourselves saw Mr. Pulsford, when between eighty and ninety years of age, who spoke of him as still a youngster, recalled their early friendship and the dreams of his youth : extolled the manly beauty of Mr. Langdon : had he seen him in his eightieth year, he would have learned the difference between youth and age.

He soon found himself whirled in a current which turned out to be that of the American war : he was born a Provincial and had not sprung from the close aristocracy of the little colony : his political instinct was undeceivable : he joined the popular party. His first attempt on the stage of rebellion was no failure : and took place in December, 1774 : when he helped to seize the English military stores in a fort of the Piscataqua, as soon as news was brought from Boston of the English order in council in relation to their exportation by Mr. Revere. Surrounding a fort with five men in it by four hundred, will come with difficulty under the head of a military movement ; but it was a political date. The getting one hundred barrels of gunpowder and the arms was something : we forget how many barrels General Washington said was all the city of New-York could furnish about those days : but the weakest of all English ministries in talents, majorities and active power, had not energy enough to have fortified and kept this noble naval station. This measure must have prevented any resistance, ruinous to themselves, on the part of the royalists of the colony, who, with offices and prophetic fears of democracy and the high popularity of the governour Wentworth, who, born in New-Hampshire, devoted his youthful energy to her advancement, and was said to live in it in those days at the rate of thirty thousand dollars a year, were in secret some party or other ; bound the people of the river to the popular party ; and shown the public that a man was ready to go all lengths, who was supposed to know his own interest better than common, and, a somewhat animating circumstance to his followers in the leader of a revolutionary party, even in that golden age of virtue, who was supposed to have a good deal to lose. It is represented by strong authority, that this political measure was wholly Mr. Langdon's : but we are not disposed to argue the question.

In : 1775 : he was sent delegate to the Congress at Philadelphia, which he attended as appears from its journals, and was chairman of committees : his name is first signed to the petition to the King : he was sent thence to Ticonderoga, in company with Livingstone and Paine, as a committee of Congress, to look to the state of Schuyler's army, the safety of Ticonderoga, provide for the listing of troops and instigate the Canadians to revolt : in which last object the committee seem to have failed. In January : 1776 : he was chosen delegate again. This congress put out its Declaration of Independence of the English crown. We have looked up the certificate of his election as delegate, which seems to explain his name's not being affixed to it like some others' names not there: it vindicates him to some extent from the charge of wanting the right instinct of notoriety. "Colony of New Hampshire, &c., January 23d : 1776: Voted that Josiah Bartlett, John Langdon, and William Whipple, Esquires, be and hereby are appointed delegates to represent this colony in the continental Congress at Philadelphia, for the term of one year from this time, any one of them in the absence of the other to have full power to represent this colony, and that not more than two of them attend at one time," &c. This was presented by Whipple: and his and Bartlett's being in Congress explains its wanting Mr. Langdon's name. Absent he was of course, for he was engrossed in business for Congress in the office of continental agent, to which he had just been appointed. Matthew Thornton, whose name is put to it, was neither present, nor chosen a delegate till September 2d : 1776: and then for a year from the date of his election, which appears from his certificate, presented : November 4 : 1776 : and three names are at war with the vote of the colony. Mr. Langdon some way or other missed having his name immortalized in this celebrated document, the historical importance of which, is exceeded by none, though a certain effeminate crispness of arrangement and language does not just suit a national proclamation, expected by everybody, to be sustained by other courses than talking, and the reasons of which nobody wanted to have any explanation of at all.

Mr. Langdon was now employed in building and fitting out ships of war for Congress, as Speaker of the House of Representatives for New Hampshire, committee of safety man, banker, and if the truth be known, we suppose something of a money-finder and manager-general, in this quarter, for Congress, throughout the war. He built, amongst others, and fitted out the sloop of war Ranger, in which Jones started on his dashing career. The American part of the Chevalier's crew, with which he took the Serapis, sailed with him from Portsmouth, though a majority of his crew, on that occasion, seem to have been foreigners, from the roll. Mr. Langdon also built the only ship of the line built by Congress; intended for the heroic chevalier, but given to the King of France, and taken by Lord Howe in the battle of the channel; we think so: somebody has told us that she was known to the English by the name of L'Impetueux; we have no means of ascertaining the subsequent history of this Portsmouth ship: if she was the ship afterwards known by that name, long the flag-ship of Sir Edward Pellew, she was the one allowed to be the most perfect of her class in the English navy; we believe, however, she was not the ship so long Lord Exmouth's. Mr. Langdon had a turn for ships, and was master of that business. He had also upon his hands the frequent presence of French ships of war in the river. (To show the exactness of rural memory, an old neighbour, past eighty, told us that French seamen used to come up to the creek to her dwelling in those days, every word she caught from them, she kept good French sixty years without knowing what it meant, and their hanging up her turkeys they bought to the rafters by the head, to cut through their necks with a cutlass, and see the turkeys flounder and their blood spout on her floor, was not like to have been a story forged by her, and looks the twilight of that glorious day of liberty which burst on the great nation with so much lustre and so soon.) Mr. Langdon also made war on his Majesty on his private account: and found time to go as an officer of volunteers to the campaign of Saratoga and to Rhode Island: a rare and probably intentional pattern of modesty in one of the most conspicuous gentlemen of the popular party, when Congress was embarrassed and perplexed in the extreme with the conflicting pretensions of its own officers to command. He was employed in every sort of business for the popular party. People unacquainted with his local reputation, may rest assured that without arraying the facts, we can give no idea of how much he did, without notoriety or remuneration. He was now in the vigor of his years. His turning the public mind in our little State, in favor of launching a small domestic force under Stark and Whipple, which gave rise to the affair of Bennington, and turned into one of the most fortunate currents of events for the popular party of the American War, is the most noted of his numerous services: rather an anomalous incident to a life the reverse of military.

Stark, a capital battalion officer, if not in the sharp operations of modern war, a great deal more, was unemployed at home: at variance with his former masters with good reason. It was idle in people taken up with organizing rebellion upon the basis of popular principles, to expect their subordinates not to set their claims upon public opinion. Stark was faithful as well as turbulent and vain. He resented the insult by not telling Congress of his victory and refusing to obey its officers, but turned from disaffection to his party. Similar folly on the part of Congress helped to drive Arnold into the most indefensible of all sorts of treason. The popular reputation of both stood justly high: the services of neither to their party in the field could be gainsaid. Both should have been promoted, or broken for some specified charge. Arnold Congress did not like to touch, for it involved the notoriousness of a dishonest, villainous life, in a very brilliant officer's being perfectly known to it while it employed him. Stark it dared not touch at all; though he was just such a man as it must have hated. His reputation with his soldiers and with his people, was not of a sort for Congress to tamper with. Both errors of Congress helped the cause by the way. Stark's being loose from it, got him this independent command, so lucky a casualty for the popular party, and the horror produced by Arnold's treason, was taken advantage of to confound the ignominious villainy of treating with one party whilst in high command for another, with a very different sort of transgression, and hold up the thunder of the public wrath over a change of political opinion; the popular party had now no changes to fear like those of the Marshals of the Empire. But to our story.

Burgoyne made his snail-like absurd expedition. It would seem rather strange that some hogsheds of rum, a private gentleman's plate, whose fortune was not more than would be a competence for a well to do sort of tradesman now, and three thousand dollars, could turn the doubtful current of events, bring to pass so brilliant and unexpected a little triumph in the field, lead to surrounding an army, and so enlighten Europe as to the look of the game, that the most powerful of subsisting monarchies could not forbear to have a hand in it. Such is the New Hampshire legend. The success of Congress's troops was moderate: Washington's well founded and heroically carried through system of concentration and secrecy was misunderstood; New Hampshire had furnished her men and they were gone. The original burst of speed of fiery patriotism was to give place to the severe rate of serious and prolonged war. The popular party of New Hampshire felt no particular call to back Stark, neglected by the great men of the earth, when they themselves, from his temper both petulant and unyielding, or their leaders, were glad to get him out of the way. Mr. Langdon had, all his life, the skill to do what people in the end would be pleased with, without his associates getting a pretence to pick objections. Wary by nature, he may have seen that it was not only too late to go back, but that it was the very time to go forward: he was looked on as a dispassionate and safe man; one that the politically timorous might follow without risk to themselves, and that would make a ticklish business go down with the friends of the young and eager as well as them. His voice went a good way. Burgoyne's back door campaign, when uniting such an army with the other, by the straight road of the ocean, would have crushed Washington, was of course, the whole of it, on the part of the English ministry, what Congress should have prayed for; and under the circumstances, he could be waited upon by a force from New Hampshire and Vermont, and struck at pleasure, if such a force were worth a copper, with no chance of returning the blow, except he separated his army or changed the design of his operations; doing either of which was certain ruin: what looked bold was the safest thing in the world. If Mr. Langdon did not see this and went with the stream as to the danger, it throws into the strongest light his devotion to his party: and at this political, if not military crisis, as the legend has it, then Speaker of the Representatives, he thus addressed the House: the words we take from the life of Stark: for we never heard Mr. Langdon speak about the business in the course of our lives. "Gentlemen: I have three thousand dollars in hard money: I will pledge my plate for three thousand more: I have seventy hogsheads of Tobago rum, which shall be sold for the most it will bring. These are at the service of the State. If we succeed in defending our firesides and homes, I may be remunerated; if we do not, the property will be of no value to me. Our old friend Stark, who so nobly maintained the honour of our State at Bunker's Hill, may be safely entrusted with the conduct of the enterprise, and we will check the progress of Burgoyne." The speech is probably made: but a man's being ready to give his whole fortune, who loved money, argues a heroic devotion to his party, and has mute eloquence enough in itself: or a political presence of mind and confidence that it would carry the day, very advantageous to his party at that season. How much was given and how much repaid we have never ripped up: it was, we suppose, the fair price of political power. The right nail was hit on the head: and three of the most meritorious forwarders of the cause were doubtless Stark, Langdon and Burgoyne himself.

Stark was taken up by a man that could do it : New Hampshire and her neighbors armed their sons and sent them to the field themselves : Burgoyne detached some German troops, nobody knows what for, except to give these a chance to catch and destroy them, and get everybody to rise that had not risen before ; and come out that was waiting to see which was the strongest side : New-England laughed at her fears of his veterans, nine-tenths of the English part of which, like enough, had never fired a gun in their lives, and were the people least fit for military service of all England : all New-England rose ; his army was surrounded ; a shock given to the notion of the superiority of the English in the field, from which, when they were become veterans, with all their subsequent triumphs, they did not recover throughout the war : and Louis the Sixteenth began his judicious and fortunate reign with revenging the Commissioner of Dunkirk, to have his ships, his money and his armies called for by his natural allies as if they were theirs, to be jockeyed by them in a clandestine peace with the people he quarrelled with in their cause, to make a very distinguished finish to the reign so sagely begun, and send the people, that even he saw were starting an avalanche, to ask the charity of that England they were so furious to humble. Rum was in those days a currency : not because people were more drunkards than now : but because what could be kept without hurt, was less bulky for its worth, which could be bartered in small fixed quantities and the market rate of which every body knew, was a better one than beef, lumber or hay. Paper money would not go, and bullion they had little, for the return voyages were with goods and rum. Our fathers though did drink. Congress prescribed to its sailors half a pint a day and without stint in time of action : and the custom of paying labourers their wages entirely in rum, which was common about here before and after, does not argue a very fortunate social organization. Stark's trophies that he sent New-Hampshire of his victory are said to have been lost sight of and sold at auction : and the letters from Gen. Washington and others to Mr. Langdon and the leading men here, in the gloom of the American war, to the amount of a couple of bushels, to have been sold to a pedlar to grind into pasteboard. This last story is rather tough : but two French pieces of cannon are made an excuse for keeping from a Portsmouth Company of Artillery a couple of new ones ; useless as cannon and trophies of Louisburgh. This is true and the other is said to be. Since this was first written, these guns fortunately for the company, burst : the New-Hampshire General Court, not France, replaces the guns.

About this time Mr. Langdon buried his father, of which the little we ever heard him say was creditable to the honest yeoman, but adorned this period of his life, by getting married at the age of thirty-eight, for the first and only time, to Miss Elizabeth Sherburne, then sixteen : a young lady of the oldest stock of Strawberry Bank ; one like himself of the numerous descendants of the earliest Sherburnes ; and likewise of the Wentworths, Cuttses and other names beside her own, who thought themselves better than other folks in the little colony. But her family was not distinguished however for loyalty to the crown. Her uncle, Henry Sherburne, had long been mainspeke and movementman of his little world. He had been Speaker of its House ten years in succession, and representative twenty, delegate to the first general Congress ever held in the colonies, which was at Albany : 1754 : and so on : a political genius in a small sphere, but grew to as large a top as the soil would allow : her father, though an officer of the crown, joined the popular party : her brother [John] Samuel Sherburne, afterward member of Congress and Judge, when young, a man of showy talents, walked on a wooded leg for them for the rest of his life : a cousin [Edward] was killed at the battle of Germantown : and William Whipple, one of the most thorough-going of the popular party, was her mother's first cousin and married to her mother's sister : which worthy lady, an inmate of our family in our youthful days, had not, on the verge of ninety, recovered from her indignation at making the peace of : 1783 : or any other peace with England at all : and proud of her descent from a Cromwellian officer, a colonist of the County of York, of the name of Hammond, took it hard our honoured father's refusing to name one of his five sons after the Protector and in sport naming him after the Pretender. Her worthy husband was bred a seaman, went to see the coast of Guinea, signed the declaration of independence, rose to some reputation as an officer, where he was known, was delegate to Congress more times than one, and after these preparatory studies, became Mr. Justice Whipple. This marriage of Mr. Langdon's, notwithstanding the difference of age, was the happiest it has been our fortune to see. Mr. Langdon's only brother, though his name is on the town records, as protesting against some of the early proceedings of the popular party, also joined it in the American war and the Republican party of the United States, but though on friendly terms with his brother, did not much co-operate with him through life. He, and not Mr. John Langdon, amongst other exploits, built the fine house in the village : now a hotel. In temper he was indeed not like his brother ; being as fond of the struggle as the other of success : but an equally remarkable personage, and of powerful talents. He was delegate to Congress, in the latter part of the American war : honoured us by serving us in various offices here : and became Mr. Justice Langdon : without the least law-education ; being about the best Judge of his day. He seldom condescended to hold a court : and resigned and accepted the office of commissioner to examine and determine the accounts of the States : on the threat of an impeachment, it is said : if he did, the most unlike himself act of his life, that he should have troubled himself about it. The Langdons seem to have had similar likings from the beginning : for he married the daughter of Henry Sherburne. He was in England during the American war, and is said to have been courted for the sake of information by Lord George Germain. There is possibly some foundation for the story, though accounts of the adventures of the heroes of a little world away from home are not always entitled to much attention, for Woodbury Langdon's imposing address and extraordinary beauty set a mark upon him, and in him Lord Sackville must have found a congenial spirit, just about as acute, haughty and ambiguous as his own. Whether he undertook to tell the English ministry, as Doctor Franklin did, that no man in the colonies, at first, thought of separating them from England, we never heard. A few years after the American war, Mr. Langdon buried his mother, to whom, and to his sisters, his conduct was perfect. The house in which she lived and died we pulled down last year; and though it usually had held a very large family, no death had taken place in it since hers: a period of more than fifty years.

The long, melancholy, perplexed and unfathomable drama of the American war was past: the separation from England was effected: the new-born nation feasted with England's humiliation: and the officers of a little standing army looked for the glory of the whole. The names of most of the great men, conspicuous at its beginning, of most of the metaphysical politicians so vehement, had gradually died into an echo: such organization as its latter days had shown, military or civil, had been in the hands of George Washington and Gouverneur Morris. Mr. Langdon had been immersed where he could get little fame, in such naval schemes as the resources his party could spare, gave him to execute: with the dying efforts of the central government he had little to do: the people's war had been transferred to the South. His being out of Congress keeps us from knowing how he had been affected toward General Washington: it is plain from his subsequent manner of proceeding that he would stand by such a man, when he thought what he called his country, would lose if he let it alone. The conspiracy prematurely exploded by some officious people came from no organized party: there is no trace of it. But the simultaneous resting of so many names greater than Mr. Langdon's, is not to be cleared up by thinking that patriots liked ever to forego consummating things themselves. Congress's standing army had been suffering cruelly and its officers were to be turned off to starve: the phases of historic proclamations, senatorial careers and so forth had been followed by another; but whether the little standing army went through half as much from bare feet and tattered breeches, or its officers from spending the vigour of life, as the getters up of the American war did because they were not in the foreground and the others were, we do not know: whoever reads deeply into the documents of that war, finds General Washington, now and then, in a very lowering atmosphere; or reads and understands his letters, finds him not so far from imperious and plain-spoken when he thought he was right; a somewhat awkward customer to refuse obedience to: in contact with whom the self-love of other patriots did not snuff a very exhilarating vapour. We believe Mr. Langdon to have been one of the very few, that favoured him in such times, then and afterward again connected with a great many men of political consequence in the war. A nutshell kicked out of history, holds some of our political history of the last sixty years. Who were known, suspected or like to have been scorched by General Washington's glory, or chilled by its reflection from his satellites, to have felt in truth, the presence of the Camp and the approach of the Palace, were afterward found among Mr. Jefferson's friends.

In the dark and wearisome days about which nobody reads, from its triumphant close to the process of gestation of the constitution of the United States, Mr. Langdon was either Speaker of its House of Representatives, or President of this State: its leader without party. He was, we believe, also delegate to Congress during this forgotten period: he was always in some office or other. He was chosen delegate to the convention called to fabricate a constitution for the United States, chosen President of the State again, delegate to the New-Hampshire convention to accept it, succeeded with others in getting it accepted by New-Hampshire, which being the ninth State, it went into operation on her acceptance, as appears from the congratulatory letter written to him of General Washington : he was then directly chosen Senator of the United States, which office he held twelve years. The first Congress met at New York : 1789 : he was chosen President of the Senate for the occasion, and there being neither President nor Vice President installed, the remark that he was the first acting President of the United States, is of course true. As President of the Senate he informed President Washington of his election, by the hands of Charles Thomson formally in the following letter : " Sir : I have the honour to transmit to your Excellency the information of your unanimous election to the office of President of the United States of America : suffer me, Sir, to indulge the hope, that so auspicious a work of publick confidence will meet with your approbation, and be considered as a pledge of the affection and support you are to expect from a free and enlightened people. I am, Sir, with sentiments of respect, your obedient servant, John Langdon." It is creditable to him to have sent in those days so simple a letter : his Democratic spirit had more than budded ; for the rest of the proceedings with respect to Washington, not the first blossom of his party's folly, had the cast of an accession to the crown. Mr. Langdon, unlike some of his strongest friends, before and after, was one of the most effective vindicators of the policy of this new step of establishing the constitution in the States : so far he belonged to President Washington's party : with many of this party, however, he did not mean a triumph at the people's expense : whether the selection Washington made of a young gentleman afterward of some notoriety, was to conciliate an influential man, we do not know : but Mr. Tobias Lear was a sort of connexion, and his ancestors had lived on Sagamore's creek, immediately adjoining the Langdons from the first : both were descended from Elizabeth Sherburne : and Mr. Lear's father's mother was sister to Mr. Langdon's mother : scandal was glad to get a chance to surmise more, without a shadow of truth, and a real relationship subsisted. Mr. Lear's penetration and vigilance were soon properly estimated by President Washington's friend, Mr. Jefferson. Mr. Langdon, when first in the Senate, was thought to lean to President Washington's politicks, though his intimacy with a list of other great names of the American war had not been broken off : by his political courage, the best fitted for tempestuous seasons, he was likewise, by his instinctive good breeding and finished gentlemanliness, the best fitted man in the world to float without dispute or censure through the changeable and intricate : the softness of his demeanour was that of the Gaulish river described by the immortal Julius in his "de bello gallico" : "flumen est quod per fines influit incredibile lenitate : ita ut oculis, in utram partem fluat, judicari non possit." His earliest votes in the Senate we do not know according to book : not having got hold of the journal complete in the New-Hampshire State library : but Mr. Langdon acted in concert at first with persons who proceeded to travel a very different road from himself. He soon afterward became one of those, in whom his countrymen pretended to wonder at the unknown phenomenon of a gentleman's being a Democrat (rather a startling sentiment by the way to come from most of them, we suppose the intoxication over night was followed in the morning by distaste of the same liquor), till his party carried the day, to be held up ever since by the men that were ready to hang them, as models of political virtue in the days of trial. His long service as Senator soon fell, when past his fiftieth year, upon the stormiest of political times, in which it was his fortune to be found in very fierce opposition to most of those with whom many have been most proud to be numbered.

Different reasons led different men and different reasons led the same men to their finally mortal resistance to President Washington's scheme of politicks, though the full curl of the surf did not rise till after his administration was closed: some of these reasons were not Mr. Langdon's, though his intimate acquaintance from the beginning of the American war with some people whose reasons they were, might have exposed him to their imputation. The establishment of their constitution found in the bosom of the United States a great many men of political consequence, and uncommonly able men, in no extraordinary degree gratified with the development of the passion of hero-worship in their republick with respect to its long real and now official head: or the prospect of its consequences to the character stamped on their government, setting out on its career. Why historians have not found out that the disaffection to him and his circle during the American war is worth historical inquiry, though subsequently disclaimed from various reasons, not the force of his party nor the popularity of the political principles most of them were suspected to hold and ultimately showed: why they persist in treating it as a golden age, is none of our business. If the reverend publisher of his correspondence, which is the only history of the American war which is true, would tell all he knows, we might learn something about it. The war was going to be finished, not by the enthusiastick rising of a people, not by the triumph of ideology, but the beaten track of a standing army, requisition, taxation, publick debt, secret state-policy, the overshadowing alliance of a despotic power: and to the glory of one man. The war made superficial statesmen talk more about the virtue of subordination to a central government, (they were wrong, for twenty dictated peaces would not have reabsorbed the colonies in the empire,) than any war that ever took place, when it was expected to prove that a fierce love of freedom (the growth of our soil), and the spontaneous efforts of such children were not to be subdued: and when plenty looked for its showering down laurels on so many provincial leaders, had overwhelmed one man with more praise from the whole world, than ever was given so cordially, sincerely, and so justly before. This was not the intended catastrophe of the piece. There were other reasons to doubt whether the further elevation of General Washington and the triumph of his friends would fill with satisfaction every secret heart: when historians draw from the height to which the distresses of the central government finally reached, conclusions of the real weakness of the thirteen States, we are, from another view of human nature, and human nature in the aspirations of equality, disposed to draw other conclusions that when some ambitious and far-seeing men saw that this war was to bring to a party of which General Washington was the head the glory, they left them to fight it for themselves. In party-language, at the establishment of the constitution, they found themselves not "the Men": the incense of the war they meant for their own nostrils had gone to other people's: the constitution was established by those people in their own despite: with a man at their head, whom they envied and had wanted to ruin, the pride of his country and the glory of his age, the same people stood triumphant and enthroned. Disinclination to President Washington's administration would have subsisted, if he and his friends had promulgated Any principles of civil government.

Better reasons than some of these, were said to open Mr. Langdon's eyes to the swiftness with which the current of events in which he was whirled was hurrying his republick to the cataract of monarchical government. The popularity of President Washington glared like the mid-day sun: he was a monarch without the name: the incense burnt to it disgusted himself. His pre-eminence as the noblest of his nation might be supported, but not its being turned to a political machine for getting people used to the method, ushering the disguised forms and tempting them to stamp with the simplicity and concentrated energy of absolute power, a new government. This it was thought, it was Known some of his party meant to try to do with it. The United States were about as ready to sit down here as the eaglet is to give up flying, when he has struck his first prey, when the screams of his victim and the rushing of his plumage are ringing in his ears, and he knows that he is an eagle. Nor was President Washington so prudent and guarded in his language and correspondence as he might have been, in the military notions of discipline and coercion he had always breathed so boldly to provincial authorities, in his panegyrics upon his own party, or the invectives he launched at the other. His correspondence is a perpetual attack upon the genius of democrattick government. "He put more faith in coercion than persuasion: the opposition to his constitution he impatiently ascribed to unprincipled men: he found more wickedness than ignorance in the conduct of the States; or those that had too much influence over them." So he said. Centralizing this incongrous confederation, its patronage to be managed by the satellites of a court, the provincial deputies to be drawn to a great town, to make sport of their boorishness and take advantage of their inexperience, surpassed the power of the men he kept about him; but they touched a very vibrating string. Strong reasons, and some thwarting, not indulgence of his ambition, must have concurred with Mr. Langdon's conduct here. He was master of the principles of money: and to no man did nature ever give with a less sparing hand every gift, or stronger instinct to use them, that would empower their owner to wreath, insinuate and please; to command success in such a sphere. He was born for a court. Mr. Jefferson, who as a philosophick democrat hated soldiers, orators' or financiers' meddling with the march of the Democrattick Principle, soon discovered a dissatisfaction he had never been much suspected of wanting to smother.

Mr. Langdon professed his first doubts to have been raised by what he saw himself. In the faction that soon appropriated President Washington, some villainy he saw, more tendency to what in the end must have called upon villainy to complete and support it: and boundless folly. We must give some force to his pertinaciously expressed opinion, with every allowance for the after-heat of party, or his mistaking the real nature of vain and noisy men like John Adams or the bantering and ironical Secretary of the Treasury. But we will make no half-defence of Mr. Langdon here. We will not seek to extenuate that for which we honour him. Let both parties have equal audience. The views of the party in power contradicted the great scheme of politicks which every democratick heart burned to establish. He had a right to attack them. Its course went to plunge the States into the very evils they had been twenty years boasting to Europe they could and meant to keep clear of. He was bound to sound the alarm. We have no pity for the men he helped to put down. If they thought this course best for the States, they were dishonest men: for their right to choose principles of government for themselves, they, these very men had written on the flag of a rebellion, whose success was shaking to its deepest foundation every government in the world, with it in their mouths they had cried to their country, the world and their God, had sworn to live and to die: if they meant to be dishonest men; had meant it always; they were bunglers and let the cat out of the bag too soon. To get the boundless future of such a nation out of such hands, so incapable or so wicked, it makes no difference which, it was full time. Mr. Langdon at first acted for himself: watching some of the party, but friendly and intimate with President Washington. He had gradually joined himself to Mr. Jefferson's fortunes, and when thoroughly, remained his unflinching political supporter for the rest of his life. He had some political connexion with Mr. Jefferson before the last went to France. this had not been in the way of his thorough-going co-operation with General Washington and his friends in establishing the new government.

President Washington had no metaphysical principles of government. The European pamphleteer of the present day, after sixty years of movement, would say: "That though there be no shadow of proof that he thought a less Democratick plan than yours could execute itself amongst you; yet he turned with contempt from the fancy of the day that the propensities of the seed of Adam were to be suspended by thirty-nine men's scheming him out a government: he knew the fallen human race too well to harbour doctrines which were nothing but the old song of the perfectibility of man, which his heart told him was an imposture and an impious cheat: but he must have seen in their right light the presumptuous spirits that took upon themselves to stop or turn to the uses of an order the torrent he and they had busied themselves to let loose: he must have seen, through the smoke of the incense that stifled him, that the rebellion of the colonies was the commencement of a movement: he could not be such a fool as to expect that he and his friends were to have a monopoly of it to themselves: with all his belief in order and form, he must have been conscious, whatever he said and however he acted, that the execution of every sort of a government he could set up, must rest on the unmixed despotism of the publick will, which, whenever it pleased, would rise and sweep away its own establishments and every thing else it pleased away with them." If President Washington knew that what he had seen in that his day, was but the promise of more to come: that the establishment of his constitution here, was but a pause in a drama acting in the world: an episode; the fruit of an accident, the confidence of a nation in him: he might not have tried to make that constitution, and the financial schemes foisted on us through it by a faction, stop the Principle's heavings, which had thrown up the new republick, himself, and his constitution with him. But our friend has not read the correspondence of the first President of the United States. If he did know this, he should have acted, as a politician, then on what he knew: not have forced on his country what he knew it did not want to have; when a democracy can only thrive upon food it chooses for itself. His own popularity was the basis of the new government: it made the constitution and upheld it. This he never discovered or was honestly loath to believe. The French revolution took him by surprise; its tumultuous and murderous harangues filled him with astonishment: their echo here, the attacks upon himself and the discontent about his policy, he could not understand and laid to foreign emissaries and the malice of unprincipled men. Like the worthy farmer of Kentucky wondering to see his sons and negroes die in his field, ignorant that the Indian Cholera might get, Had Got to the United States. When we read that he took the trouble to affect to make the French government or the young men who meant to govern France by pillage and murder, think that he wished well to their revolution; that he positively took offence at Genet and confounded his froth with the real course of that great tragedy, that he looked for a French army in the Southern States, that he charged the growth of the Democratick party to Democratick societies and Democratick demagogues, and saw no deeper than That: when we see the noble old man stemming the fresh swiftness of the current with his own virtues, the financial schemes of his Secretary of the Treasury and the constitution of the United States (!) we do not wonder that nothing but his hastened death saved such a party-leader from seeing the ruin of his party. Can we blame Mr. Langdon for leaving, as a politician, such a party to its destinies? No: we cannot: if he had ever espoused its principles. As little as a man of honour: for every body knows he never had.

Mr. Langdon said, Mr. Jefferson said, and many others that ought to have known, that the conduct of a faction showed plain enough, that in their hands the constitution of the general government and systems it enabled them to mature, some of which the first ought to know something about, for he voted in company with them for most of them himself, would fasten on the republick what they and none better knew it had pledged itself to the world to abhor. Most of them, the first ones, went upon a principle in earnest and some avowed it: others did not. Honest in nature many of them were: they meant to cheat the nation for its own good. They Dared not leave a government out of stipulated, known and tried hands: they Dared not trust the people with political power. Very good: a not very doubtful majority of the wisest and best of mankind have been strangely wanting in courage in this regard too. Hamilton spoke out. He stands up before us unarraigned for hypocrisy. "Inconsistency? We must recommend him to the mercy of the court. If his precocious part in the American war be damning proof of his having ever aided and abetted in putting out such a doctrine as that a people is fit to govern itself, of having waved aloft himself the incendiary's torch, the jury is so satisfied that he does not mean to put out such doctrines again, that we hope his sentence will be light." President Washington tried to suspend his decision. But President Washington now made two mistakes that were fatal indeed. Notwithstanding this constitution was carried through with the utmost difficulty, a feather just turning the scale, with such a popularity as, were it never so well founded, must have had some human fluctuations, with all this of his on one side of the beam, he proceeded to raise on it a system of policy, which he thought vital to his people doubtless, but which, but for him, they would have never dreamed of setting up. Such an effort to force the fortunes of his country, shows his unacquaintance with the most essential principles of successful democratic government. And more: he neither expected, nor at first understood the French revolution and the spirit it sent stalking abroad, and ascribed the whole trouble, one half of which was temporary, to Democratic principles; and their propagator here, the Democratic Party. From his letters he was at last shocked, exasperated and frightened. We should like to see a record of his reflexions the last two years of his life. Instead of attacking him in form, the forbearance toward him was extraordinary; and shows his power: the father of his country and the head of a faction was paid more deference than the goodwill alone of a party nothing but his known hostility kept down, was like to pay him: but it was too much to look for, that no eyes should ever be evil towards the impregnable strong hold, which their enemies had got into, and from which they played such heavy artillery upon them: or that in the republic he had himself helped to establish, no bad men should be found, to hate him for the virtues that had placed him above them. Hamilton saw the worthy President's popularity would not do the business: even that could not carry the weight and threatened to treat such trainers to a break-down: Robespierre and Marat did not frighten enough, and unfortunately the beautiful truths they issued from the bosom of the French tribune, seem to charm more than they amazed. The secretary of the treasury saw love nor fear would answer: he had a scheme. Unquestionably a scheme of governing them well, willing or no to be so, is a discovery of interest to the human race: philosophers have been trying these five thousand years to find such a specific; Alexander Hamilton said he had found it: and it turned out to be the old one every body knew of before, of Corruption, to be administered in the lately discovered vehicle of the modern Credit System. Different characters have been huckstering with it ever since: he meant to cheat the people for their good; the others for their own. He wanted a strong government for his confederation and he thought he knew his countrymen too well to act on aught but their love of gain: when he said so, he at least deserves the credit of impatient and out-spoken honesty. His successors proceeded to subject the republic to the moneyed power, not to hold up the constitution, the working such machines by such people as he handed them over to for any body's good but their own, such principles as that soon slept with their fathers, through funding, banking, assumption, internal improvement, American system and railway systems, with the same contempt of all constitutions and common law. The inspired high priest of Mammon did not guess so badly that the Spirit of evil would pick out that personage for his vicar on this part of the earth : though he lived not to see the worship of his master established in the land. He should have survived the persecution and dispersion of his brotherhood, to see on every hill and in every grove the smoke of that idol's altars ; to see the nation that broke them to pieces kneeling to adore : to see them once and again dragging to the sacrifice their country and their rights, amidst the triumph of their enemies, the pity of their friends and the contempt of the whole world. Of a truth the Tempter knows his trade, keeps up with Transatlantick revelations in the art of government, suits his wares to the market, and has his delusions ready for every country as well as every age. The course of this nation is not to confusion and agrarianism, but to the lust of gain and its frantick idolatry : to laugh at those of others and bow down before darker idols of its own. So much for the Hamilton party : Mr. Langdon soon opposed it : though a man that loved money, at an age when it gets the upper hand, that was prone to banking and funding, to whom such atmospheres were familiar and congenial, that knew how to make it and keep it, and felt no envy of others that did so too.

Another party took the broad ground that the time was at last come to try metaphysical principles of government : and were for proceeding to do it : that the world must sometimes be badly governed they knew as well as other people ; but for this they saw no remedy in a great deal of governing : they were for letting loose the Democratic Principle to work for itself. They said it was folly to try to half-develop a principle, to which they could see no earthly bound, and in tampering with which they were ten times as like to go wrong as right. Some said it Ought to be let loose ; others said They were bound to, for every body had heard their Promise to let it loose : others knew it was let loose Already, and were looking to see, like the fisherman in the tale, the gloomy and unearthly grandeur of the genius growing in the air before their eyes. They did not think they were men to conjure that spirit back into his box. They were for acting as pure, abstract Democrats, as far as they could : some hoping, and some knowing that nothing could permanently do any thing with it. The idea of people that had thrown off the government they were born under to set up a democracy's binding themselves with their eyes open, or keeping such a bond made with them shut, after they had got them open again, one might suppose would never have entered the head of any man of common sense, a bond not to do whatever they had a mind to whenever they pleased : and this party took up the only honest ground there was. Unfortunately for the historic harmony of their conduct with the purity of their ideas, to establish one Principle, they went into partnership with an element of the other in its strongest form. To this party Mr Jefferson belonged by nature, ambition and the love of experiment and notoriety : Mr. Langdon joined it from political instinct and the love of pleasing : their conduct was governed by imperative circumstances.

For a third party, stronger in itself and more straight-forward in action than either, with never a traitor in its camp, soon taught the last the difference between theory and instant practice ; joined it to itself and has dictated the policy of this great republick. The League so contradictory to look at, had in it some ingredients of affinity to each other : in both Parties the country interest predominated. The same class seems, much of it, to have ranked itself in this League amongst us that in England so long endured devoted to the faith of Rome, then Royalist, High Church, Jacobite and Tory, which last it is chiefly still ; the party of the towns leaning the mean while to Calvinistick, Republican, Whig and Radical. The great interest at the bottom of the League, its enemies have been known to urge, might see in a connexion with the propagators of the Democratick Principle, and the warm attachment they professed to it themselves, a chance to answer those who might ask them to turn their propagandist spirit to themselves. Be that as it may, they retorted with great success and no small truth, that the minutely-penetrating tyranny of the counting-house was more galling to a democrat than hereditary distinctions. Well then : it is obviously impossible that such an important modification of the Democratic Principle as the hereditary slavery of the common people could subsist in half the United States without a marked influence upon their parties. The zealous endeavors of the great South to establish the triumph of the Democratic Principle in the abstract, for which the world owes it so much, would be accompanied with the qualification that the compact, of which our constitution was the happy fruit, should not expose them to any premature and untoward extension of it to themselves. To the great South is the republic consequently chiefly under obligation, and to the fortunate warmth of sensibility and clearness of argument with which it propagated its doctrines for establishing the principle, so essential to the harmonious vigor of a confederated government, that the municipal policy of each State must be kept from the uncalled-for interference on the part of a majority of the others. The struggle in Europe in which five million of men lost their lives, the slaughter of her peasants, the storming of her cities, the burning of her towns, the guillotining men, women and children if they stayed at home to interfere with the government, and shooting them if they went off, which might give strength to the enemy, they loudly cheered : and this is upon record : " Such people justly suffered ; they oppose (not the application of the Principle, that we do too, but the Principle itself) a Principle : the price shows the value of the goods." The great South had espoused the same principle and propagated it every where but at home with a zeal which left no doubt that their not doing it there too was regard for the interest of the African race. The States Rights Party is the growth of the South. The State of New-York amongst the others once talked it ; but we can remember when in New-Hampshire we found it unknown, and a task to explain it. The States Rights doctrine is the growth of the South : and joking apart, it deserves the thanks of the republick, whatever its motives, for upholding it as it has done. This is but part of the deep obligation the republick must be sensible of. An agricultural people by custom and compulsion, their healthier nerves the sooner warned it of the progress of the infectious atmosphere of the counting-house in the confederation; they pronounced the whole American Credit system an anaconda, by which they and their children were to be charmed, slimed, devoured and digested. Here they did get on the same road with the Party above named: which without their powerful aid looked unlike to move their wheel. A lasting alliance took place between them and the Democratic Party against the common enemy: their union brought into being the great Republican party. The uniting what seemed to have so little affinity has been laid to the matchless political chymistry of Mr. Jefferson: hastily; for it lasts to this day. The great Republican party Mr. Jefferson, and with others Mr. Langdon, made, carried through and upheld to their last hour. To such men the praise of political sagacity is justly due: those that felt most trouble of mind about the central government's not being enough felt throughout the confederation, have long since owned their blunder: and love of the enchanted land seems not like to be left unimplanted by education, of the whole of it; or to weaken with time; or pride for its grandeur lessen with the growth of its power. To the Republican leaders of ninety-six the praise of political sagacity is justly due: it is loudly and sincerely given. But asks the startled European liberal: "did not calling the League a Democratick party ever strike you like sporting with that holy name? What say you gentlemen, Democrats of ninety-six? Speak out!" "We did not call it a Democratic party: we called it a Republican party: we know as well as you do that of all Aristocratick systems, ours is the deepest rooting, the loftiest shooting, the widest branching, the rankest, most baneful and deadly weed; unelevated by the danger, unnerved by the effort to tame men of our own race; a nobless with the most servile of God's creatures for its peasantry: we know too that the world will not take for an answer the single fitness of the men for menial offices and rustick toil, their unfitness for political power; the rest of the world does not dispute that that may be given to all who are fit for it; and we know that we hold and proudly have sworn that Political power should be given to All people, whether they be Fit to use it or No: we know all this: if this League of which African slavery is the basis, grow to a historick party, and that take the name of Democratick, and turn the enemies' cannon on ourselves, we have not yet given it; our intestine rivals have nothing to say: we found a slavery we hope will be extinguished; they, with equal pretensions to purity to their own country at first, and to every other still, are trying to bring a new one in, the most insulting, the most subtle, the most perfect, the most hopeless and most hateful of all." "Well then: this is the only answer you can make, but it does not enable me to answer the defiance of my antagonist to prove that Democratick government has ever subsisted." Mr. Langdon was no casuist; though most of his sworn friends were Southern gentlemen, and most of its gentlemen were his friends and of his party, we never heard him illustrating the Democratick nature of African Slavery.

This league however was forming its line of battle under a Democratick standard, when over its head burst the French revolution. The Republican party was thrown on the defensive. Mr. Langdon held his ground : with Mr. Jefferson he had courage enough to maintain his principles in the tremendous confusion which disturbed the judgement of almost all, ground the sharp weapons of party-warfare to their keenest edge, and gave plenty of sincerity, depth and fury to the strife. For both parties it was a clever, stirring rallying-word. But nothing was more preposterous than to couple the leaders of the Republican party with the guillotining convention of Paris, on one ground. The pure States Rights Party was a majority of the Republican party : the National Assembly took upon itself to destroy every sort of provincial government and prerogative in France. France was in the hands of the ruffians that wielded the mob of Paris : Robespierre, master of France, could not have escaped their vigilance and got out of France, had he tried ; as there is reason to think he had sense enough to have done if he could. To keep off a centralized democracy, wielded by an oligarchy, was the professed purpose of the Republican party with Mr. Jefferson at its head (we truly believe Mr. Jefferson, though far from a faultless personage, to have deeply loved his country and have rested his reputation on the durable success of the great experiment. Partly because he found it made to his hand, partly because he spied, where no others choose to look for it, a practicable and good curb in the mouth of pure democracy, we believe the leader held to his heart so warmly these convenient allies. The States Rights doctrine is essentially a conservative principle. He saw in it an invulnerable champion for ever of the rights of minorities. If it expel him from his band of metaphysical democrats, it exalts him to a prophetic patriot). While some were proscribed as Federalists here, for seeking to aggrandize the central government at the expense of the States, the democrattick party of the young republic held different notions, and guillotined them there, under the same name, on the charge of seeking to aggrandize the provinces at the expense of the central government (Robespierre, Danton, Billaud and Company) representing the people. From Mr. Langdon the rhetorick nor glory of "La Republique une et indivisible," the career of the head of the great French military democracy nor the splendours of the imperial throne, never wrung an applauding word. But he saw no cause to haul down the flag he had sent up. The name of Jacobin could not drive him from his Democrattick ground. From his choice of party to his twelfth year of senatorship, neither the flattering friendship of President Washington, the sophistry nor the courting of his secretary of the treasury, from whom he said he received the highest compliment he ever did in his life, the fury of John Adams's reign, the drawing rooms of Philadelphia, of which he was said to be a distinguished ornament, nor the long, the long discouragement of a minority, ever dictated a vote of this well-tried Democrat. What completes the whole, though the honor afterward paid him, by a great and triumphant party, for this political career of his as a senator, was boundless wherever he was known, and though for twelve years he was the gayest of men, and conceded to be one of the most engaging and elegant men and finished gentlemen in the most exclusive circles in the United States, we never knew him to speak of this part of his life, of himself, in the course of our lives. The speech of the secretary to him, we never heard him tell but once, but the spirit with which he told it, showed he understood it, and he was not a man to mistake the meanings of others. The modes of the Washingtonian era were nearer the days of Sir Roger de Coverley than ours. On some occasion he happened to take the secretary home with him in his carriage: "Sir," said Mr. Langdon, "you are riding with one of your staunchest political enemies;" "Sir," said General Hamilton, throwing his hat down on the floor of the chariot, "I see an honest man." His friend, Mr. Randolph, distinguished him in a parenthesis in our day, (we do not know that the speech was reported,) not to the advantage of some others: "the Democrats of the North too were with us, Sir; the Democrats of the North, Sir," (correcting himself, "I mean John Langdon and the Respectable and Honest Democrats of the North, Sir;") &c. Even Cobbett let him alone; "good Johnny Langdon too; what does he know about it?" being about the force of the blow the great English Ishmael condescended to strike.

Consurgitur ex concilio: the Republican party was a minority of the senate through Mr. Langdon's long service as senator. He with all the senate but five, voted for the first Bank of the United States: directly after the establishment of the constitution of the general government: when in consequence of the pre-eminent ill-successfulness of the attempt of Congress and the States to carry on their war with their credit and in a methodical manner, instead of leaving it to its revolutionary destinies and betaking themselves simply to coercive requisition, which, had not France held them up, they must in the end have done or receive the dictation of the English crown, the republick was happy to catch at any rope; and the nature of the new power it was tampering with, about as well understood as that of some chymical power existing in nature, but not yet found out. He voted for this bank: and was, we suppose, an original subscriber of some account. We have always been professed enemies to the whole American Banking System, have no enmity to such a bank alone: and will not discuss his vote, having discussed the whole subject enough elsewhere. We believe he had been concerned in the Bank of North America: the real first National Bank: he was an intimate friend of Robert Morris. He even thought it, with other Democratick leaders, of indispensable use and necessity to establish a Democratick bank at home: the artillery of a battery the enemy had established in a redoubt of that description was felt severely in his ranks. His glance over the political field was always unclouded. Whether the enemy defended their redoubt from a point of honor or considered it the key of their position, we do not know; but they fought gallantly and their intrenchments were fairly stormed, before they would let any body have a bank but themselves. Mr. Langdon did not think it a crime to bear arms, when he had declared war in a good cause, much less did he throw them down when he had got to the field of battle. He could not keep the enemy, of course, from his choice of weapons, and was fortunately even better master of those they chose than they were themselves. To overthrow the unprincipled party predominant in his native State, like Julius's mixed troops at Pharsalia, some chosen light troops on the enemy's uncovered flank, made more decisive the advance of Republican principles in his line. He fought them in short with their own weapons ; but where he gave one dollar, the enemy threatened to take away ten : Cato said he bribed when the constitution and liberties of Rome were contending for. The offices of the general government in New Hampshire, after the Republican party was saved, were sometimes held by his connexions : he not choosing to recommend where he had no certainty of established Republican spirit ; but Mr. Langdon was liberal in his turn : his purse was always open to throw light into the most distant corners of the State through Republican newspapers and shield from the oppressions of a vindictive aristocracy the democratick poor. History is customarily composed by people who know nothing about it. Nobody is fit to write one of any branches of the English race, that has not carried through contested elections himself : and if the history of these States go on as it is going, it will get to be as true as the legends of Livy : who wanted no German literati to tell him that his veracity was questionable, when he tell us at setting out that his great republick did not deserve a human origin. Mr. Langdon voted in the senate for the Funding system, and his colleague, Mr. Wingate, against it. For it : both senators from Massachusetts, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, and South Carolina, Mr. Morris of Pennsylvania, Mr. Read of Delaware and Mr. Carroll of Maryland : fourteen : all the others against it : twelve. He voted against assuming, or trying to assume the real debts of the States : this was the culminating point of the Hamiltonian rocket : it passed the House of Representatives, even Mr. Gerry helping : Mr. Langdon by his own efforts stopped it in the Senate. After this, party lines were plainly drawn : farther conversation of the sentinels at the out-posts was forbidden and stragglers except for information as to the state of the enemy, strictly punished.

Party allegiance must have at first, indeed all along have been inadequately understood or acknowledged ; for the right Republican party was in a minority in his State till some years after Mr. Langdon left his Senate. His opposition to the whole process of the treaty with England and its injunction of secrecy, soon turned on him, as nearly the only senator from north of Mason's and Dixon's line that voted against Jay's treaty, the artillery of party abuse and menace ; and we have been so used in New Hampshire to something else, certain persons that once thought so well of him and Mr. Jefferson afterwards keeping him to swear by here, and the other everywhere else, that he shows strangely in this historick light for a time : and we have had in our possession a letter from his sworn friend Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, gravely asking liberty to contradict a rumor of his having turned his horse's head, on his way home, to get clear of being mobbed for his vote or some such thing : a correspondence which must raise a smile, between two such dignitaries of the Republican church as him and Pierce Butler. Long since the death of both of these two of the ten fierce and sworn defenders of the old Republican faith, through its darkest and gloomiest days, the grandchild of one is married to that of the other. Mr. Langdon had now to face a danger he was more like to take account of than of his limbs ; for the first time in his life, that of public odium : he faced it. We own that a man, to whom popularity was the breath of his nostrils, wants to be seen at intervals swimming against a strong stream, to set him off. We are strangely given to question, all of us, the sincerity of people who are always on the strongest side. Most of us have a strange craving to see, in some period or other, of every body's history, a real desperate resistance of the man to superior odds: to see what he is, we suppose. Some of us, if the truth must be told, love more a series of furious rallies than a very smooth stream of triumphs; and love to see courageous self-defence when it is surest to fail. Though he knows the dogs must tear him to pieces, when does the stag look so handsome as when he turns to bay? Mr. Langdon was in New Hampshire when the alien and sedition laws were passed: he lost no time in making known his judgment concerning them. He likewise stood stanchly against the warlike drift of President Adams's majorities, getting sometimes into a minority of five, in which there found himself with him a young gentleman whose after-conspicuousness as a captain and statesman, he may or may not have foreseen. Mr. Langdon was very happy in nursing the destinies of every party he joined. Investigation of his political life but discovers some overlooked debt his country owes him. In this Republican conservatory his fortunate hand helped to ripen the Democratic bud which afterward dazzled us when it blew into such a gorgeous flower. This young gentleman was the Honorable Andrew Jackson of Tennessee. The gentleman who voted with him against the treaty, however, was the celebrated Mr. James Jackson, of Georgia, a native Englishman; of whom we should have more account, as besides his talents, he was beyond all dispute the earliest, most consistent, thoroughbred, and unapproachable Democrat of the whole party. Mr. Langdon was not a speaking senator: from temper, a characteristic dislike to argument and comparisons, and an unfortunate anti-democratic notion, now exploded, that it demanded more education than he had had. And too with their disgust at the trappings of royalty and hatred of excessive refinement, both of the great republicks seemed unexpectedly to look for a rhetoric enchased and ornamented to a degree which that den of aristocrats, England, scoffed at and despised. He had pretty much forgotten at his age all but his own business and the concerns of his constituents and his country; and would not have shone in a forum crowded to suffocation with Ciceros. Be that as it may, he did not try to do what so many stood ready to do for him: whether, indeed, if its Congresses were thickly sown with men of his cast, men whose character and standing are become fixed and known, if, however paradoxical it may seem, its Congresses were made up more of people who owed their being sent there to any other merit or remarkable quality on the face of the earth, than such as would most naturally inspire a confidence of their making a figure after they got there, the great republick would lose by the exchange, is still an uncertainty. What he did say in publick was to the purpose. His messages and letters are good. A phrase in one of them of trust in the destinies of his party, a few months before Mr. Jefferson's triumph, "that we should yet be saved," has long since got to be current political coin of the realm. Drawing towards the close of his senatorship, order was established in France by the First Consul: the nocturnal thunder storms left off here as the sun of Jefferson rose above the horizon. Mr. Langdon was accustomed to bring things to a complete and perfect period ; he had reached his sixty-second year, how restlessly he would have borne the triumph of the Federal party, we do not know ; he saw his friend triumphant and left the scene. His station was just his own ; looked to by a party in power, adored by the multitude where he was known, still as ever an amiable and fortunate private gentlemen, and where he could leave off when it looked to every body that he might have gone much farther.

Had he kept on with unaltered pace at sixty-two, and ambition had grown out of the victory of his party ; it would have been, what he never elsewhere did, doing things in an outrageous degree : he had none of that sullen energy, the force of whose blows grows with the struggle, which always must go on to deeper stakes : much less did he want to talk and act politician forever, and die on the fourth of July : his life was ripening, and he turned to the land of his fathers. He was become a sort of citizen of Philadelphia, where he had passed much of his time for more than twenty-five years, and was better known than any where else, and he came back to Portsmouth, meaning to leave New Hampshire no more. We believe he never left it after, except on the last illness of his sister, the wife of Governor James Sullivan of Massachusetts. His relatives seemed to like the Democratick camp ; for his niece married Governor William Eustace, of the same State and party. Mr. Langdon never was prone to talking in his retirement, of the numerous scenes in which he had been no looker on. But of secret springs, of what made the American war and protected it, of what fabricated the constitution and reared on it its funding and banking domes, what picking and compounding of ingredients made the great Republican party ; he had thorough knowledge : the heroes and demigods of our Iliad and Odyssey ; he knew them all. Had he taken the secretaryship of the Navy, which somebody says Mr. Jefferson offered him about this time, we know nothing about it, it would have given a different cast to his friend's naval policy. He meant to leave off for good : this project he did not altogether execute ; but the rest of his political career belongs to his native State, in which it was as brilliant as the theatre could make it.

He served as member of the House of Representatives of this State for four years consecutively. He was then induced to become candidate for the office of its governor : after a well contested election he was chosen : and re-elected three times. His popularity in New Hampshire it is not easy to tell : it was all-pervading, unattackable and irreversible : it subsists to this day. He had declined running again : 1809 : the consequence was the immediate election of a candidate of the other party. Mr. Langdon went so far to please his friends as to come to the post once more ; won the race for his friends, and another heat still in a canter : 1811. This reappearance on the political turf was against his wishes. About these days, what we never heard of till we happened to see it in an old newspaper, the stanchness of his support of all Mr. Jefferson's policy may have been questioned by somebody, for he takes the strange step of coming out with a manifesto in its favour. A real wish to leave the stage may have been construed into abatement of his Democrattick zeal. He however, we think, sometime after contributed to set up a since well-known and powerful defender of the Democrattick faith, then a young printer at Concord. His enemies possibly may have doubted, or his friends not have known that he was already beginning to think of things they never dreamed of in a man so worldly. He declined the almost unanimous caucus nomination at Washington of his party for Vice President of the United States, and Elbridge Gerry took his place. He served, however, as elector and voted for Mr. Madison as late as: 1812. This was the last act of his political life: he was seventy three years old; and now he received a blow from which he never rallied, the death of Mrs. Langdon, though the youngest by twenty-two years. This man, whose history, for forty political years may be embraced in the simple statement that he was a party man usually in the fullest sense of the word, was feeling what the simplest hearts are not always willing to own. "It is not affectation: my mind of itself turns to nothing but the world I am hastening to and the days of my childhood: it may be the imbecility of age, but seventy years I have almost forgotten; the tall youth, that left home with fifty dollars in his pocket, the ocean on which he made his fortune, the senate-rooms, the counting-rooms and the ball-rooms where he passed so much of his life, are to me the history of a stranger: I hear my mother's voice as I am playing at the door in the chips of the house I was born in: when by myself I turn to the days of my childhood." These dreams were not laid to Mr. Langdon's charge, but give reason enough for his leaving his party to itself. He had lived long enough to see scattered colonists growing to a mighty nation, to see more tributary streams meet than ever yet met in the deep and single current of one nation's fortune, he had played his part for just forty years; and he thought it full time for the fathers to leave the children to own and defend their awful inheritance for themselves. Politicks were for the living, not for the dead. They were no longer his business on the threshold of the grave: and religion had taken their place.

When Mr. Langdon to his masterly comprehension of less momentous concerns proceeded to add a clear perception of these we do not know: but here his and his friend Mr. Jefferson's journeys were widely apart. We cannot ourselves remember when he was not, unobstrusively, but strongly and proudly devout. Without much austerity, though once in a while its unexpected presence showed it was not put on, he worshipped at the then national altar of New-England Calvinism. His eyes remained unclouded to the political or other virtues of his friends by their different sentiments with respect to a thing which all must think of more importance than all others, that think it of importance at all. A great majority of his spiritual friends were political antagonists and his next-door neighbour and pastor: another next-door neighbour was an active political ally and even a companion though suspected of a very hovering faith. In his religion still reigned the premeditated purpose, the deliberate arrangement and the polished and wary deference of the man of the world. Two people could not well believe in each others sincerity and soundness of mind both, one of whom hoped with all his soul that he was a Christian, and the other treated the gospel as an imposture ; and his personal friendship for one great man, who of all others did most, right or wrong, to set aside all public acknowledgement of belief in the gospel, a doctrine which, with all horror at the union of church and state, in people that believe its truth we do not profess to understand, shows that he looked upon politicks as a political business of life, in which his friend's worldly judgment might be good, if in nothing else. We cannot reconcile the matter ourselves, though others would find it so easy : but we believe Mr. Langdon to have been sincere in his religion. His religious phasis was the noblest of his life : no loss of friends, no loss of fortune, no disappointment drove him from the world ; it was the deepest harmony of a long and well-spent life, the serenest calm of masculine old age. After we remember him, the ceremony of family worship came over as surely as the morning and the evening, and his avoidance of loose and profane conversation was that of his sect. But he could not hide himself in the cloak of Geneva. A boundless benevolence of heart, a strength of domestick affection and the love of pleasing, so strangely mixed in him with other things, burst through every garb he chose to put on to the last breath he ever drew.

He wound up his maritime concerns at the exact time the great fortunes of New-England began to be made, and substituted no professed employment for them. He took to being neither farmer nor countrygentleman. He had not enough money for the last ; but in a country that would suffer the growth of such a plant, he was not unqualified by nature for attempting the character with some success. The first he never showed any turn for : though over fond of owning land, troubling himself about fruittrees and such like, which fill up time and talk, but cost little and have nothing to do with farming, with a lurking turn for horses and extraordinarily given to talking to country people. An ever-working, never-ending activity, a Saxon energy against odds, deep running in deep ground, was not Mr. Langdon's distinguishing characteristic : though he had these qualities full as much as often does much good. He never understood a large agricultural operation, nor, after he left his father's house, lived out of some town or other, great or little, that we know of. No one could converse with him or with men of his sort here in that day, without perceiving that they thought that every thing but commerce and speculation was other people's business, not theirs. What fortune he had himself he had made by traffick. His youth fell on the straining growth of colonial navigation, his middle age on the American war : then came publick life, he was at home a sort of absentee : then came the twenty years war : there was but one thing thought of in the way of business, in that day of little seaports, built up as quick as the ships and rotting as soon, of barn-like houses stuck upon gravelly hills stripped of their forests, straight rounded turnpike-roads, the West Indian trade, the youth of New-Hampshire drawn from the plough to die in Demarara, swaggering, dram-drinking, trotting-horses and Lombardy poplars, which we piously hope will not come back again.

Though fond of money, Mr. Langdon's benevolence reached farther than tenderness to other people's heresies and expanded with his years. One might have thought that some early crimes were to be expiated by ecclesiastical and charitable gifts. His genius for the counting house enabled his enemies to lay this to ostentation. They were wrong: it was the love of pleasing; a well in his heart that never ran dry. After he was come back from Philadelphia, he rejoiced to entertain all the company that honoured Portsmouth with their presence: at his own table he was himself: every man that ever graced it, from President Washington to the farmer from Winnipisauky, or the Calvinist from Andover, was sure to leave him a personal, if not a political friend for life; and few ever withstood him that he meant to gain. But the last twenty years of his life were not passed in much company: his wife, a widowed sister who had buried eight sons, whose husband had been a Royalist, and who had lived in the cities of Boston and New York throughout English occupation of them and was a mine of Royalist history, and some of his grandchildren, making his family. Mr. Langdon was one of those men upon whom nature chooses to shower her gifts of person and manners with an uncommonly generous hand: his enemies said they were the best part of the man: to deny them was impossible. His natural good-breeding reached the limits of the science, and he passed through forty years of politicks without the tradition of a personal quarrel. His gentlemanliness was completely finished, and stood rubrick in the courtly circles of President Washington's reign: Presidency we mean; but it was the same thing. His politeness was irresistible, and of its effects, innumerable humerous stories remain. John Langdon, it was said, could more certainly make a friend for life of a man in refusing to lend him money, than his brother Woodbury in granting his prayer. But it was an armour of proof, which dazzled and repelled all familiarity of itself: when he was called the worst sort of a Jacobin, no man was ever familiar with Governor Langdon. The politest, the most filled with real general good-will of any man in the world, nobody was ever more embarrassed by any one's presence than his, that went to ask him a favour. Most of those great men, in whose urns we shall ever worship the ashes of such daring antagonists of the artificial inequalities, such victorious champions of the destined and eternal equality of man assumed an august elevation of air and behaviour, an Asiatick stateliness (impracticable, at least unknown in the imperial capitals of the old world); a symbol of just pride in the favour of the people. He mixed with it an intoxicating condescension: if it deserve that name; for he did not think, as some in courting the people, it would please all of them to lower himself: this is a compliment of a dangerous nature, and may act upon wrong associations of ideas: he paid them another compliment, and affected to raise them all to a level of himself: in getting hearts in return for politeness and political virtues, he was absolutely unrivalled. As the fashion of the day, he travelled always in his own carriage or on horseback: the chariot is worth description, but the worthy Governor riding into the country with holsters and housings to his saddle, much more; though a good horseman, with a turn for them he said he got from father and grandfather both, with an orthodox taste in them uncommon in a New Englander, with cocked hat and boots, the crooked, calveless legs of the mounted African following, with leather-breeches and innumerable watch-seals, making a strange foil to the celebrated limbs of his principal. Cyrus, who was a Jersey negro and a Royalist, was as well known in New Hampshire as the Governor himself; died in his house, and was followed by him and all of us to his grave in the same churchyard where his master lies; the celebrated and superb Doctor Joseph Buckminster attending in person. Though not so handsome a man as his brother, Mr. Langdon was so uncommonly well-looking as to be remarked and recollected wherever he went. We cannot remember him such ourselves; but he was unquestionably of very perfect symmetry and rather large stature: fresh but not very fair, with blue eyes, a strong, straight English nose, like the portraits of the English Edwards, particularly King Edward the first, and lost no tooth till past seventy. After seventy he failed, his wife's death aggravated it, but the taper burned in the socket and he did not die, and then of a sort of bronchial consumption, till September: 1820: having nearly completed his eightieth year.

We have thus given, all we profess to, "some account of JOHN LANGDON." His part in the world was not that which justifies a stately biography. Our judgment of some things he was mixed up with will not meet with commendation and we do not expect it. We have certainly tried to keep from over-praising kindred blood. Against him, it is certain, that all his worst enemies made out to say, and political ones he had plenty, was, in despair of getting people to care for what they raked up against him, that bitter pill for an enemy to take down, was, that instead of following up rigid principles with the most sorrowful deviations from them through life like many, Mr. Langdon on the contrary performed the feat of uniting with benevolence, uprightness and religion, an instinctive, refined and consummate, knowledge of the world. He did so. But; though being still the most really amiable and benevolent man in the world, the fondest of pleasing and of giving way, he never lost sight of his real interest in his life; though he loved political power and laid hands on it; though he loved money and knew how to get it; yet all his offices were forced on him, with age he grew careless of money and too generous for his means, and more than half of his long life, and his knowledge of business in traffick's most palmy days, he gave up to his Country and his Party. We cannot make up a life of him. It degenerates into general eulogy. A little river makes ten times as much noise, dancing down rocks from one barren plain to another, bringing nothing and leaving nothing, as one of the wandering horse-ponds of the West, so quiet to see, floating slowly, arching themselves with such monstrous foliage and flooding such gorgeous meadows. There are tempers which could have shown us, with such chances as he had, plenty of contrasts and broken schemes, heroisms to brag of and absurdities to laugh at: and of biography these things are the soul. His right to praise rests not more on what he did than on what he did not: he never incurred of his own act a calamity nor a mortification in the course of his life; he never got anything on his hands to explain or make up for; he never showed his talents in getting himself out of difficulties he got himself into: we can say in a word what we always stand ready to lay to the charge of such men: that is; the want of sincerity. And to some it is done most justly. But it is not satisfactory proof of a man's having a false heart, that nothing he ever did in his life, can be made by his enemies to stand as wrong before the world. Whatever the motives of his actions may have been, through every season and adventure of his long and varied life, not only were they full of worldly wisdom, but more than is common they were generous, manly and good. Must some suspect him, because he was just what every body wanted to be himself, and got what every body wanted to have himself in so delightful and so exquisite a way? But what is the court before which, and who are the men by whom for this he stands arraigned? Are they the men to argue that trying to withstand the world is the path on which the great and good should always be found? that useless virtues should be instilled? success despised and our interest scorned? If they be, we have less to answer. Who schools such doctrines here? Utilitarianism does not hold them: hers is the national worship, and she fears no rival faith.

Though he is of the "Ilian gens," the direct descendant of the first band of Englishmen that brought to New-Hampshire their laws and their blood, we will not quote for him three lines from the noblest of dirges, that his political friends, if they tell the truth, would think so well to be fitted to John Langdon: we will leave the imperial hexameters to go back to Rome's homelier Latin, for a real domestick epitaph, the very sound of which suits better what we remember of our worthy ancestor: they are simple and beautiful in themselves and seem written for our Republick's Senator too, though found, almost in our age, in the Roman Scipio's tomb:

Gnaivo prognatus fortis vir sapiensque
 Quoius forma virtuti parissima fuet;
 Consul, Censor, Aedilis quei fuet apud vos;
 Honc oinom ploirume consentiont Romane
 Duonorom optumom fuise virom.

In yet homelier English:

Of honest stock: courage and wisdom crowned
 The man who still good as he looked was found;
 Whom all its honours to his country bound:
 Best of the best in his New-Hampshire home:
 A better Consul from Patrician Rome
 Was never carried to the Scipios' tomb.
